POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE WED WEDNESDAY

Robert Cummings and Lula VanDusen United at Home Wedding

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at 9 o'clock Wednesday evening, November 13th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Orlon VanDusen, of Norwood township, when their daughter, Lula, was united in marriage to Robert Cummings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Cummings, of Marion.

Rev. G. R. Parker, of the Congregational church, performed the ceremony, using the ring service. The bride was dressed in blue chiffon velvet, trimmed with silver ornaments, carrying a bouquet of chrysanthemums and carnations, was escorted to the altar by her father at the sound of the wedding march played by Mrs. C. W. Blanchard, of Chicago. The bridal couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Joe Troyer, of Charlevoix.

Fifty-four were present and ice cream and cake were served. The out-of-town guests were Mrs. Cynthia Key, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Blanchard and Mrs. Orla Roberts, all of Chicago.

The young couple will spend a honeymoon in Detroit and will be home to their many friends after November 17 at Mrs. Coulter's residence.

NO DEER HUNTING FATALITY SO FAR

OUTSTANDING IN VIEW RECORD NUMBER OF HUNTERS

Many Illegal Deer, Heavy Killing Bucks Reported—Soow Comes to Aid Army of Hunters

Conservation Department officials figuratively crossed their fingers today and hoped the unusual freedom from accidents enjoyed by the army of deer hunters will continue.

Cpl. William A. Bergin, head of the law enforcement division, in constant touch with conservation posts in the deer hunting territory, reported no accidents for the first four days of the season.

"That is most unusual," Bergin asserted. "In addition to that, we have not had one report of a missing hunter."

The department continued to receive reports of a heavy slaughter of illegal deer. Bergin said his force of wardens already have reported 100 illegal deer killed in the Lower Peninsula and between 60 and 70 in the Upper Peninsula.

The slaughtered does and fawns have been found in the woods by patrolling wardens. They are taken into conservation posts, dressed, and distributed to welfare agencies, charitable institutions and state hospitals.

The number of violators this year, Bergin believes, will be comparable with figures for last year. More than a score of deer hunting law violators have been haled into court during the first four days of the season, he said.

Reports from conservation posts at Mio, Gladwin, Roscommon, Trout Lake, and Marquette indicated that hunters have met with good luck. Wardens stationed along trunk line highways to inspect the automobiles of returning hunters reported many bucks riding the fenders and bumpers.

The weather in the Lower Peninsula continued mild with some snow. Snow fell in both the Lower and Upper Peninsulas Tuesday, encouraging hunters with the promise of good tracking conditions.

Maj. Roy E. Cotton, secretary of the State Conservation Commission, declared the open weather encountered so far this season in the Upper Peninsula indicated hunters would have opportunities to bag the bears, to which they are entitled by their big game licenses. Coyotes, he said, are plentiful in the northeastern part of the Lower Peninsula and in the Upper Peninsula, despite the $10 bounty on their heads.

FIRST ACROSS STRAITS

Fred Coon, who hunts in the Black River district near Naubinway, has the honor of being the first Michigan hunter to bring a buck across the Straits. Fred bagged his deer at 10 o'clock Friday morning, the opening day, and reached St Ignace on his return at 4 o'clock the same afternoon.

REO CROSS WORKERS ARE ASSIGNED

ROLL CALL DRIVE IS IN FULL SWING IN COUNTY

Concentration of Effort Will Be Made During Final Week—Public Urged to Respond

With the most strenuous effort of the 1935 Red Cross roll call drive centered on the last week before the campaign closes Thanksgiving Day, those responsible for the drive urge the public to respond to this worthy cause.

Mrs. E. J. Edwards to whom was assigned the task of organizing the city in zones and appointing workers to solicit their respective parts of the city, has announced the following:

North Side—Mrs. Clarence Wood, Mrs. Henry Partridge, Mrs. Oakley Hammond, Mrs. Robert Boutheon and Mrs. Robert Bridge.

Valley — Mrs. Cozel Chew, Mrs. Carleton Dean, Mrs. Harold Miller, Mrs. P. J. Fessenden and Mrs. E. J. Hiller.

The Kiwanis Club at its meeting Tuesday evening, adopted its cooperation in the drive by volunteering a membership of five dollars. The Legion gave a similar sum. Another campaign is being carried on in the schools and it is anticipated several memberships will come from this source.

Charles H. Hamlin, county drive chairman, was unable to report results from Boyne City and East Jordan, but declared that the campaign in Charlevoix is going ahead with every indication of reaching the goal set for this city.

The county's share of Red Cross memberships this year will go to a most worthy cause—the aid of underprivileged children. Only 50 cents of each membership goes to the national organization, the remainder staying with the County Chapter.

SUCCESSFUL CROPS SEASON NEAR CLOSE

Yield of Principal Crops 18 Per Cent Above 10-Year Average

The 1935 crop season, now drawing to a close, has been a favorable one for most Michigan farmers.

The combined yield per acre of the principal crops of the state this year was 18 per cent above the 1921-30 average, according to Verne H. Church, senior agricultural statistician. From this standpoint, Michigan surpassed all of her northern neighbors.

Frosts caused some damage to late crops during October, particularly potatoes and grapes. On the other hand such crops as corn, field beans, and buckwheat exceeded earlier expectations, and apples and pears are harvesting out closely in line with the indications of a month ago.

NAME SLOAN SUPERVISOR WPA WORKS

WILL REPRESENT COUNCIL ON ALL CITY PROJECTS

Adopt Resolutions Aimed to Clean Up Indebtedness Outstanding On the Sewage Disposal Plant

Several matters of routine business were disposed of at an adjourned meeting of the city council Monday evening.

Through resolutions adopted, the council paved the way for final settlement of indebtedness outstanding against the sewage disposal plant construction, matters held up by technical details.

Supervision of WPA projects under way within the city will be kept within the reach of the council through a motion which gives City Engineer Robert F. Sloan the authority to act in a supervisory capacity on all projects.

In an effort to keep a man experienced in fish culture stationed at the local federal hatchery as a guarantee, so to speak, of continued cooperation with efforts of the Charlevoix Sportsman's Club in its fish propagation work, the council directed the city clerk to write Congressman Prentiss M. Brown to use his efforts at Washington to retain Lige Geer as hatchery foreman. For several years past the federal hatchery closed to regular operations, has been opened to hatch steelhead spawn.

The council adjourned to the next regular meeting date, Monday, November 25.

NO BEAVER TRAPPING SEASON DURING FALL

Charlevoix County Open Territory Anril 1 to 15 Next Spring

There will be no beaver-trapping season in Michigan this fall.

Instead of a fall season the State Conservation Commission has decided in favor of different open season next spring for the Lower and Upper Peninsulas.

On the recommendation of H. D. Rubl, chief of the game division, Department of Conservation, and Glenn W. Bradt, of Michigan State College, who spent the summer studying beaver-trout conditions, the commission established the spring seasons with certain exceptions, as follows:

From April 1 to April 15, inclusive, in most of the Upper Peninsula and from March 17 to March 31, inclusive, in all counties of the Lower Peninsula north of Township 16 and in addition the counties of Montcalm Mecosta and Midland.

PLANTINGS OF TROUT TO INCREASE FOR 1936

Michigan's plantings of brook trout in 1936 will be 20 per cent larger than this year, if hatchery losses are normal.

The Fisheries Division, Department of Conservation, has recently placed an order with commercial hatcheries for 8,375,000 eyed brook trout eggs, 20 per cent more than was purchased for 1935.

STATE OFFICIALOOM PUSH SAFETY ORIVE

JOIN IN CAMPAIGN TO CUT DOWN TRAFFIC TOLL

Plan to Tighten Regulations Governing Drivers' Licenses and Bar Persistent Offenders

The state put the power of its official agencies behind the campaign to reduce traffic accidents Monday night.

Four state officials, addressing a safety mass meeting at Lansing, pledged themselves to use every weapon at their command to purge the highways of dangerous drivers and make the traffic lanes safer. Legislation to make mandatory the revocation of license of drivers who pile up a record of minor accidents may result.

Gov. Fitzgerald declared a protective measure of this sort is necessary.

Would Tighten Regulations

"It is idle to generalize and say our highways are the property of all the people," he said. "But we all know the use of our highways should not be available to those who cannot use them without endangering the lives of others.

"There must be a tightening of regulations governing the issuance of drivers' licenses. Physical examinations should be insisted upon, coupled with tests to establish the applicant's knowledge of traffic laws and ordinances and his working knowledge of the handling of a motor vehicle."

The governor advocated frequent, enforced inspections of automobiles. He asserted the educational campaign recently authorized by the State Administrative Board will be pressed.

The governor urged the people of the state to absorb and comply with the educational campaign. He suggested they use their power at the polls to weed out local officials who will not enforce the traffic laws.

Bar Persistent Offenders

Secretary of State Orville E. Atwood announced the establishment of a system of classification in his department which persistent petty traffic offenders may find a barrier to continued use of the highways. He declared a "record" of those involved in frequent accidents is being built up, to be used when they seek drivers' licenses.

He asked that drivers and enforcing officials report all traffic "incidents"—that is, minor accidents of all kinds—as well as major accidents, that the state department may have a comprehensive record.

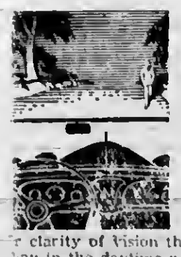
No. 2—NIGHT DRIVING

IT'S JUST AS TRUE as can be that when people get expert at anything they're apt to begin getting careless about it, and that's what we have to look out for when driving our cars. For instance, we recently heard a group of engineers discussing night driving, and one thing they kept talking about was "over-driving our headlights."

Now that term seems to be a common one with them, but it's new to most of us.



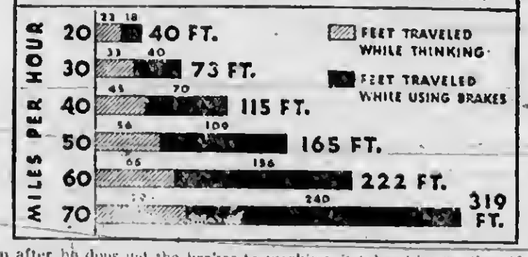
What they mean is that the distance we can see clearly by headlights is, of course, limited, and that we are apt to let our car speeds get beyond the point where we could easily stop within that limited distance. It's true that we naturally tend to go a little slower at night. But if we aren't careful we gradually get going faster than we realize, and that may get us into trouble. You see, momentum, the same force that tries to keep us from making turns safely; that cuts all kinds of capers on slippery roads . . . never sleeps! He works on the same old principles night and day. Darkness doesn't hinder him, but it hinders us.

Most modern headlights are pretty wonderful lights, but after all they don't give us the distance or clarity of vision that daylight does. So, on considerably shorter notice than in the daytime a vehicle or pedestrian can come out of the darkness. Almost before we know it we may have to slow down or stop for someone or something on the road . . . perhaps one of those big lumbering trucks that you barely see till you're right up on them; or a car whose tail-light has gone out . . . an unexpected curve, or what not.

And that's where we meet up with momentum again. You see, stopping isn't the one simple action we always thought it was. The truth is, we are told, that there are really three things we have to do to stop. First we have to think of stopping. Next we have to move one foot over on to the brake pedal. And then we have to push down on the brake pedal.

Now we might not believe it, but they tell us those first two steps take time. Less than a second, perhaps, but even in that instant momentum is carrying us on. In fact, at only 20 miles an hour the average driver goes 22 feet before he can even start to use the brakes.

DISTANCE REQUIRED FOR STOPPING



hen after he does get the brakes to working, it takes him another 18 feet stop completely, even with the best brakes in the world and with good res, under favorable road conditions. At least so we are told by the State oard of Public Works of one of the states which has made a very intensive study of drivers and driving conditions, and which has prepared the data for the above chart.

The important thing to realize is that distance needed to stop increases a great deal as we increase our speed.

We just have to remember that when we're moving along in a car, we think by the foot, act by the foot and stop by the foot, and if we aren't careful, it's easy to get going faster than is really safe.

Now, just as engineers have told us how to operate in safety with our own lights, many experienced drivers have pointed out how to avoid trouble from other people's lights. They say that all we have to do when passing other cars at night, is to stop looking their lights and watch the right-hand side of the road.

The truth of the matter is that night driving can be just as pleasant and as safe as day driving. But we have to be more alert and more careful.

Infantile Paralysis

Infantile paralysis [illegible] disease characterized by an [illegible] usually occurring during the late summer or early autumn and revealing itself by certain signs and symptoms, such as a stomach and intestinal upset or a nervous attack, during the course of which, or soon thereafter, there may occur a weakness or paralysis of the muscles of the arms or legs, or both, or of the muscles of the abdomen and back.

Infantile paralysis is not a new disease. It was not until 1840 however, that a clear [illegible] of the disease was established. The first important epidemic in America occurred in Vermont in 1893. Dr. John Ruhrah, professor of diseases in children in a Baltimore medical college, contracted this disease while he was traveling in Europe three or four years ago. President Franklin D. Roosevelt was taken ill with it while on a vacation in Maine in 1921.

The cause of infantile paralysis is unknown; but the symptoms are well known, and the treatment is on a definite scientific basis. The alleged factors included in the transmission of the disease are flies, vermin, unwashed fruits and vegetables, unpasteurized and uncertified milk, and sick children. "Polio" carriers are individuals who harbor and pass on the infection, although they themselves are not ill.

The path of entrance of the poison into the body has been indicated as the nose, throat or digestive tract. Fever is among the early signs of infantile paralysis. A child may complain of an upset stomach, and diarrhea may occur, but there is more often constipation. Later the neck and back may become stiff and extremely painful, but no watchful parent is going to delay until that time to summon a physician to diagnose the illness, and this is especially true if cases of infantile paralysis have already been reported in the community.

The best prevention, other than watching constantly for sign of the disease in children when there is an epidemic and calling a physician at the first untoward symptom, are included in the simple rules for healthful living: Have plenty of fresh air and sunlight in the home. Exclude flys and other insects that may carry the germ. Avoid public places; do not use drinking cups and towels that others have used, and keep children away from crowds and from other children.

No one can predict an epidemic of infantile paralysis. It is impossible to run away from the disease; therefore, the aim is to concentrate on its early recognition and immediate treatment.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

With Thanksgiving so close, Sunday dinner must take second place in the plans of the housewife. This week it is wise to buy table and other perishable food. In order to know what will be needed, a menu with a market list should be made. Tell the butcher what size turkey you want so that it will be on hand for the next week.

Sunday's dinner will be attractive and good but not quite so special as usual. Chucks of beef and lamb and pork cuts other than from the loin are fairly economical. Eggs are cheaper but butter is higher. All root vegetables and most members of the cabbage family are cheap. So are string beans and spinach.

Low Cost Dinner

Pan-broiled Ground Beef
Mashed Potatoes Glazed Carrots
Bread and Butter
Vanilla Pudding Preserves
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

Beef a la Mode
Baked Stuffed Potatoes
Spinach Vinaigrette
Bread and Butter
Chocolate Cream Pie
Tea or Coffee Milk

Thanksgiving Dinner

Consomme or Grapefruit
Celery Olives
Roast Turkey
with Two Kinds of Stuffing
Giblet Gravy Cranberry Sauce
Cauliflower, Maitre d'hotel
Green Beans
Hearts of Lettuce
Roquefort Dressing
Rolls and Butter
Pumpkin Pecan Ice Cream Wafers
Fruits and Nuts Coffee

If an election were to be held today, would Roosevelt be re-elected? If you want to know how public opinion stands on this question, read "America Speaks" in Sunday's Detroit News.

ALCOHOL IS A POISON

Alcoholism, one of the four great scourges of modern civilization, is caused by the drinking of ethyl alcohol, one of the alcohol poisons. "No other poison," says Dr. Emil Bogen, "causes so many death or sends to institutions so many drinkers, both physical and mental, as does alcohol in the various forms in which it is taken." Two of the alcohol poisons are familiar; methyl or wood alcohol and ethyl or beverage alcohol. The danger of drinking wood alcohol is well known—that is, paralysis of the optic nerve, blindness. The effect of drinking ethyl or beverage alcohol—not so generally understood. This effect also is definite. It causes a numbing of the nerve centers, but it is not so perceptible and shocking to the drinker as is the effect of methyl alcohol, because the numbing makes him less able to judge his own conditions.—From Palmer "Alcohol Education Series No. 2."

DREAMS COME TRUE?

With the start of the coming year all former dreams of social security for the citizen will begin taking recognizable form—for by the end of 1936 the tax collector will be abroad in the land in great numbers demanding toll from employers and workers alike against that Utopian day when uncertainty for the future will be dispelled—when the aged, the unemployed, the crippled, the unemployable, the unfortunate, will alike become wards of the state — a huge family that shall not know hunger nor want, neither shall it thirst as it drinks from the "fount of government benevolence."

Some idea of the immensity of the social security plan, now a federal law, may be gleaned from the statement that by 1939 social security taxes for Michigan will cost close to a quarter million dollars a day, Sundays and holiday included. No state can hope to escape this tax by refusal to meet federal requirements. In that event the tax will be collected and spent in other states. The 1% on payrolls and salary checks will start at one per cent in 1935, increasing to three per cent in 1938. Roughly estimated this six per cent levy is expected to produce $90,000,000, all of which with the exception of 10 per cent retained by the federal government for administrative purposes will be sent back to be spent in the state. Unemployment insurance benefits will not be attempted until a reserve has been set up over the three year period when the maximum tax is reached.

NEW COLLAR MAKES OLD DRESS SMARTER

Choice of Neckline Has Influence on Attractiveness of Garment

Wide lace or detachable collars for dresses will add smartness to a wardrobe, change the lines of some garments so that they appear new, and will enhance or improve the appearance of the person's face who wears the dress, according to clothing specialists at Michigan State College.

The selection of a pattern for a neckline depends upon the shape of the face. An oval neckline harmonizes better with most face types than any one other shape. A V-neck tends to emphasize thinness of face but this may be counteracted by using the suggestion of a curve in cutting the V.

Round necklines make the face appear rounder but this may be subsequently by wearing a tie which draws attention from the neckline to the tie itself. Square necklines are not a wise choice for most women but they sometime can be used, were impossible otherwise, if the sides of the square are curved slightly and the right angles left in the corners.

In making collars it is wise to underline a lace collar from muslin first. What is meant, if this muslin collar does not hug the body line on the outer line of it tends to ripple, darts should be pinned in it where it appears loose. Run the darts to nothing as they approach the neck line. The fluted muslin collar may then be used as the pattern.

A full discussion of collar making is given by the college clothing specialists to women enrolled in the county study groups. The mimeographed outline used for the collar lesson will be sent to those who request it from the home economics department at East Lansing.

Pork Prices Expected Lower Than for Summer Months This Year

Increased supplies of pork are in sight from the larger crops of spring pigs this year, according to the annual outlook published by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The outlook also states that the crop of fall pigs is decidedly larger than last year's. Hog prices are expected to average lower than in the marketing season of 1934 and 1935 but are expected to be lower than for the summer months in 1935.

Continued increases in numbers of hogs produced during 1936 and 1937 are expected. The increase next year is projected at between 20 and 30 per cent, and the 1937 production is apt to be still higher.

TIP-UPS LEGAL FOR ICE FISHING DURING WINTER

"Tip-ups" will be legal in ice fishing this winter.

The State Conservation Commission has ordered that no individual can set on inland waters more than two tip-lines, one hook to a line, and under immediate control, but this has not outlaw the "tip-up." The "tip-up" may be used as long as it is kept under immediate control.

ORGANIZE STATE FOR SEAL SALES

TB CAMPAIGN WILL OPEN ON THANKSGIVING DAY

Twelve Million Xmas Seals to Be Distributed to Agencies Early Next Week

Forces of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association are being rallied throughout the state preparatory to the launching of the twenty-ninth annual sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals on Thanksgiving Day. Twelve million Christmas seals will be put in the mails by the state association early next week, and the total will be swelled to more than fifty-one million by affiliate organizations in the state.

Theodore J. Werle, executive secretary of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, announced that preparations were being completed at the Lansing office. Thousands of sheets of seals have been folded and stuffed in envelopes, and supplies are being rushed to those who will aid in the direction of the sale in all parts of Michigan.

Officials of the association were convinced this week that the total sale during the twenty-ninth annual campaign would surpass the 1934 mark. Dr. Bruce H. Douglas, president, believed that the general upturn of business in Michigan would be reflected in the results of the sale.

"Volunteer relief organizations everywhere are finding people in a better position to help out this year," Dr. Douglas declared. "Preliminary surveys carried on by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association have shown that many are anxious to resume their contributions this year."

POTATO GROWERS TO HOLD CO-OP SCHOOL

First Session to Be Held Tomorrow at Traverse City

The Michigan Potato Growers Exchange has arranged a "cooperation" school during the fall and winter for managers of cooperative shippers associations in Northern Michigan.

The first session will be held Thursday at Traverse City, when reports will be given on the results of field study of 70 Michigan cooperative associations by A. B. Love, Lansing, and C. L. Nash, of Michigan State College, will discuss various phases of the industry.

WHEN SKUNK HOLES UP, SEASON IS OVER

The general game bill passed by the 1935 Legislature places both of these species of fur bearers on the protected list, subjecting them to closed as well as open seasons.

State law forbids any hunter or trapper to dig out protected game animals at any time of the year or to molest their homes or disturb them while in their homes.

Reunion in Michigan

ON THE last Thursday of this month the people of Michigan, like millions of their countrymen, will observe Thanksgiving Day. In doing so they will be following a thoroughly American custom, a custom which originated more than three centuries ago when the Pilgrim Fathers, immediately after their first harvest in the New World, set aside a day of Thanksgiving for the year's blessings.

The custom, antedating our Republic, survives as our oldest native holiday. Despite the interval of three centuries, despite the momentous changes they brought into American life, the annual festival continues to draw countless American families into yearly reunion at Thanksgiving; and among the modern forces that foster this ancient custom, the telephone occupies an important place.

The telephone helps to combat the distance created by the extension of our frontiers. It fills a modern need. It contributes its share in making the arrangements for a celebration—ordering supplies, extending and accepting invitations, arranging meetings, changing plans at the last minute, sending regards, regrets or congratulations.

Efficient, unobtrusive, often taken as a matter of course, the modern telephone thus plays its part in our daily lives, serving us all as readily and faithfully on holidays as during the working week.

RYE GROWERS FACE LOW FUTURE PRICE

Adjustment of Harvest Appears Only Way to Improve Prospects

A combination of factors has caused Michigan rye growers to receive such low prices for their crop that an adjustment program for next year's harvest for the crop is necessary if any improvement is to be expected, according to R. J. Baldwin, administrator for the AAA in Michigan.

The main factors confronting the state rye growers are a crop this year much above normal needs, a very limited export market for foreign rye, and total rye supplies for the coming year approximately double those needed for domestic requirements.

Rye production in the United States this year is estimated at 52 million bushels, as compared with 16 million bushels last year, when the drought was the worst on record, and as compared with the five-year (1928-32) average of 39 million bushels.

Meets first Wednesday evening each month at 7:45 p. m.

Reading room open Saturday, 3 to 5 p. m.

Sunday school, 12 o'clock.

We cordially invite the public to our service and reading room.

"Soul and Body" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, November 24.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (Romans 1:20): "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 71): "The identity, or idea, of all reality continues forever; but Spirit, or the divine Principle of all, is not in Spirit's formations. Soul is synonymous with Spirit, God, the creative, governing Principle outside of finite form, which forms only reflect."

ARGONNE IS OPERATING UNDER NEW OWNERSHIP

Willis J. Kerns, who has operated the Shintangle Inn for the last two summers, has purchased the Argonne property near Charlevoix and will operate that popular rendezvous throughout the winter, he has announced.

The Shintangle Inn was closed November 1, but will be reopened again in the spring.

LEGION ACTIVITIES
By F. V. Tyler

Next event, on the Legion program is the turkey kenn party on Tuesday evening, November 26th, for which tickets will shortly be on sale. There will be turkeys, geese and chicken as prizes. This is an annual event, anticipated with pleasure by many Charlevoix citizens.

Over 20 boys turned out to the charter meeting of the Sons of the American Legion, Monday evening. The youngsters used the new shooting gallery for the first time and enjoyed themselves hugely. Their next meeting will be on Wednesday evening, November 27th.

Alterations to the basement dugout at the Legion Home have transformed it into a cheerful and cozy rendezvous for the post members and the newly formed junior organization. A 40 foot shooting gallery, furnished with a brand new Winchester .22 repeating rifle and plenty of cartridges is the newest and most interesting feature. The big ping-pong table has been installed in the alcove under strong lights and the pool table, which is now in the upper hall, will shortly be brought downstairs and equipped with a new cloth, new cues and balls. Since the walls and ceiling were sheathed and the storm shed built, there is no difficulty in keeping the place warm and the electric ventilator takes care of that important item.

Membership in the post is now 81. The winter's coal is in the bins and paid for and the post has a nice bank balance and but few bills. A lunch is served every regular meeting night. Each post member is now receiving the American Legion Monthly, as in the past, and, in addition, a copy of the newly published National Legionnaire, with its interesting general news of the Legion and its work throughout the country.

EDITORIAL

LASTING RESULTS

The views of Secretary Ickes that public works should be of permanent and lasting value seem to have been recognized at least partially in Washington, with the assignment by the President of part of the millions appropriated for relief to projects approved by the Secretary of the interior. Although the bulk of the relief money will flow into cheap jobs calculated to produce quick labor returns, some at least will go into projects that will mean a better national life in the future. There will be many people in this country who will be happy in the thought that the peppery secretary of the interior was able to get this point across to the White House, if not by reasoning, then by tempestuous indignation.

There are New Deal politicians who don't approve of Mr. Ickes, it seems, but that will not hurt him in the eyes of many of his fellow citizens, who like him for his rugged honesty, his sound common sense, his forthright courage, and his vision of what are genuine values. He stands for a Square Deal. These are virtues that Americans still like to see in their public officials.

EASY VICTIMS

If you are broad-minded enough to swallow everything that comes along of course you are in the sucker class, but there are a large number who make up this aggregation. One of the soft marks that are worked is the fellow who falls for everything, particularly advertising. A stranger can tell a merchant he has just what he needs in the advertising line and very often convince him he has long been wanting just such a fake, and pays him money for which he could get legitimate advertising in the home newspapers. All is not gold that glitters and all is not circulation that is claimed by these fly-by-night solicitors. Thanks are cheap. We often receive letters thanking this newspaper for publicity given all kinds of entertainment and numerous others, which we appreciate, but when the sponsors of the above take their printing to some city shop we don't feel we have been fully paid. Every newspaper gives hundreds of dollars of publicity every year to projects of this and that nature only to find that the printed program has been produced by an outside firm. When this happens we don't believe we are getting a square deal and in the future the free boosters may be suspicious by their absence.

THEY FOUND THE BUG

A couple of "Michigan boys" recently made a discovery that will save Michigan millions of dollars. One was born in Illinois and both are grown up and have "Dr." attached to their names, but Michigan claims them because Michigan institutions helped to educate them.

Ever since 1932 Michigan beet growers have been worried over a disease that killed the center leaves of the beet plants. Dr. J. E. Latila, formerly of the staff of Michigan State College, and Dr. G. H. Coons, who got his doctor's degree at the University of Michigan and afterwards served in the botany department of Michigan State College, studied the beet disease and discovered that a little common borax, added to the soil at a cost of a few cents an acre, can prevent a loss to the beet industry which at times has amounted to 15 per cent of the crop.

About 18,000 Michigan farmers every year get considerably more than $5,000,000 for the beet crop. Who says it doesn't pay the state to give young men scientific training?—Detroit News.

TRIBUTE TO BUSINESS

Business existed before art, literature, or education. It coordinates and makes serviceable to mankind the thoughts and talents and labor of men. It furnishes the incentive for endeavor and supplies the stimulus for invention and discovery. It gives practical application to ideas. It organizes, systemizes, manages and directs all human effort. It develops the natural resources, opens the mines, refines the raw products, manufactures the materials, transportation and distribution. It gathers and disseminates the information. It provides the means for carrying on the world's work. It builds the roads and the railroads, the ships, the vehicles, and the aircraft. It founds the cities. It supplies the food, shelter, clothing, materials, machinery, vehicles, tools, implements, appliances, comforts, conveniences, luxuries and amusements. It is the wealth-creator—and the pay-roll-supplier. Wherever we live, whatever we need, no matter where grown or produced, business brings it to our door. Civilization has ever followed the trail of commerce and trade and business leads the way. Without the activities of business, there can be no progress, no prosperity. There is no wealth without work, and there is no productive work unless someone creates. Business and the business man serve society by creating work.—Preston S. Arkwright.

WORDS THAT LIVE!

"If the world is finished, if there are no more rewards to be won, if there is no more wealth to be created, if there is nothing to be done but divide up the wealth that already exists, if there is no further need or use for the creative impulse, I we have become a nation of old people in our short 150 years, if the pre has gone out for us then the collectivist plan is what we want.

"But if there is any youth left in us, if there are any more inventions to be made, if there is any more progress to be achieved, if there are any more rewards to be gained—give back to us as free born Americans, our opportunities and we will build here a finer world than the world has ever seen!"—Preston S. Arkright in an address at the University of Georgia.

Apple Aptitudes

I heard someone say the other day that choosing an apple is almost like choosing a husband, and I believe she was about right at that, because there's the same amount of guesswork involved in either! Even considering appearance, complexion and general sweetness — you can't be sure. You must know your apples! Did you ever think of "apple-discretion?" If so, what does it picture in your mind? Mostly a lot of apple-sauce, would be my guess, or perhaps visions of apple dumplings, apple pie or cider.

Apples in general are confusing because there are so many different kinds on the market, so the best advice I can give is to ask your grocer or fruit dealer which to use and why. I'll stay on my own ground and give you some suggestions as to what to do with them after you get them home. Today I'm listing for you what I call "apple aptitudes" along with a few of my favorite apple recipes. I hope they'll prove helpful:

1. Apples appear at ease with almost any kind of meat—baked, fried or in sauce.

2. Add apples to stuffing for pork roast, pork chops, duck or goose.

3. Peel part way down when baking to prevent apples from bursting their skins.

4. For that professional glazed appearance on baked apples, baste them with syrup made by boiling equal parts of sugar and water until thick or use maple syrup, honey, or any sweetened fruit juice.

5. Add to other fruit juices to encourage them to jell in making jelly.

6. Vary baked apple by serving them filled with chopped celery, nuts, cream cheese, etc.

7. Add different flavor to apple sauce by adding orange juice and grated orange rind and a bit of lemon juice to the fresh juice of the fruit.

Apple Fritters

IF YOUR BREATH HAS A SMELL YOU CAN'T FEEL WELL

When we eat too much, our food decays in our bowels. Our friends smell this decay coming out of our mouth and call it bad breath. We feel the poison of this decay all over our body. It makes us gloomy, grouchy and no good for anything.

What makes the food decay in the bowels? Well, when we eat too much, our bile juice can't digest it. What is the bile juice? It is the most vital digestive juice in our body. Unless 2 pints of it are flowing from our liver into our bowels every day, our movements get hard and constipated and ¾ of our food decays in our 28 feet of bowels. This decay sends poison all over our body every six minutes.

When our friends smell our bad breath (but we don't) and we feel like a whipped hound, don't use a mouthwash or take a laxative. Get at the cause. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills, which gently start the flow of your bile juice. But if "something better" is offered you, don't buy it, for it may be a calomel (mercury) pill, which loosens teeth, gripes and scalds the rectum in many people. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name and get what you ask for—25¢. ©1934, C.M.Co.

A YOUNG PIONEER

When several hundred families were sent to Alaska from the Middle West to settle the Matanuska Valley, the Red Cross sent a nurse, Mariclaire de Foras, to remain with them for a year to help protect their health. Among the first friends she made were the little pioneer, Arthur Hackel years old, and "Prince," the pup who went with his young master to Alaska.

RED CROSS REPORTS BUSY YEAR AIDING DISASTER VICTIMS

The American Red Cross assisted sufferers in more disasters throughout the United States during the year ending June 30, 1935, than through any similar period in the organization history of the association, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman, revealed recently in presenting to the annual report which has just been released.

The 129 domestic disasters in which the Red Cross extended aid during the fiscal year exceeded by 56 per cent the average over the past few years. Admiral Grayson said "Not only was the period heavy in the number of disasters, but the geographical distribution was wide, with 37 States and 353 counties affected.

"Through these disasters and times of community distress, the Red Cross assisted 110,000 persons," the Admiral disclosed.

Spectacular service was rendered in many disasters because of the unique ness of the problems and the far-flung points affected. The work of the National organization covered in the report carries stories of the Morro Castle burning; the trench-mouth epidemic in the beautiful San Luis Valley of Colorado; the great tight over a wide front in the mid-west dust bowl against respiratory diseases; floods, hurrfeanes, and tornadoes in many sections of the United States.

In addition to the disasters taking place within the continental limits of this country, Admiral Grayson pointed out that work had been made necessary by disasters in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, where 26 disasters were recorded in that archipelago. The American Society also assisted the Red Cross of two foreign countries in caring for victims of floods and earthquakes.

The cooperation of types of disasters called for expert council on matters relating to health and nutrition as well as epidemic prevention. Last year's work proved the value of the structure and administration of the Red Cross disaster relief, the Admiral said the very frequency of occurrence and the variety of types constituting a severe test of the organization chartered by Congress to handle this type of National relief.

Expenditures of the Red Cross for relief of persons stricken by disasters within the continental United States amounted to $464,413. In addition, $75,000 was sent to the Philippines to assist them in three major relief operations necessitated by typhoons. $5,000 went to victims of the Indian earthquake, and $5,000 to Poland for victims of severe floods. A number of smaller foreign emergencies called for sums totaling $2,500.

The months of February, March, April, May and June were heaviest for tornado disasters. Floods occurred throughout the year. Serious fires calling for Red Cross assistance took place during July and December. A devastating explosion took place in Tennessee during April. Most of the hurricanes struck States along the east coast during the fall and early winter.

"All of this assistance to persons in distress," Admiral Grayson pointed out, "was only possible through generous contributions made by citizens in all sections of the country."

Most of this support of the disaster relief service comes from the annual Roll Call held each year from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day.

DRIVE IS PLANNED ON STRAITS BRIDGE

A meeting of Public Works Administration officials and members of the Board of Commerce at Detroit indicated that a concerted statewide move would be under way soon for action on the proposed $30,000,000 Straits of Mackinac bridge project, which would connect the two peninsulas from the city of Mackinaw to St. Ignace.

An application has been filed with the PWA for a 45 per cent allotment to help finance the project. A previous application for a similar grant was rejected.

HUNTERS URGED TO FILL BIRD TALLIES

FORMS PUBLISHED IN THIS AND OTHER PAPERS

Information of Great Aid to Conservation Department in Checking Bird Population

Upland bird hunters are asked to furnish information regarding their hunting experience this fall through bird-tally forms which are being printed by the newspapers of the state in cooperation with the Department of Conservation.

Mats have been sent to all newspapers with the suggestion that they be published several times if space permits during bird hunting season. The method of reaching sportsmen is long need for the first time this fall, but urgent, and expected to be greater than under the card system of the past several years.

Since 1929 the department has distributed tally cards directly to sportsmen, but the returns annually have been disappointing. Of 30,000 cards sent out last fall, only 300 were returned with the information asked.

If a sufficient number of tallies are obtained the information furnished is regarded as a reliable check on hunting conditions. Compilations made each year from tallies are filed for reference in checking partridge, prairie chicken, and phensant populations and in determining the desirable length of the hunting season. They also are referred to in drawing up hunting regulations.

When properly filled out the tallies furnish an indication of the number of birds seen per hunter, number of birds bagged per hunter, sex ratio of pheasants, and where hunting conditions appear best.

Tally forms may be obtained upon request at this office.

Holler, vice president and general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Co., who with other executives of the company is attending the annual exhibit there. Chevrolet is displaying its new product both in Grand Central Palace and at a special General Motors showing in the Waldorf-Astoria.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

State Seeks Data On Auto Crashes

Possibly the most powerful weapon the state of Michigan may ever possess in its war against unfit or dangerous drivers, is being built up in steel filing cabinets in the Department of State where a central violations file is being assembled. Reports have been requested from every prosecuting attorney in the state, of all convictions for violation of motor vehicle laws, and from every police department in Michigan of all automobile accidents reported to them which result in injury or death.

The ultimate goal of the plan is that the true and complete driving record of every person in the state, licensed to drive or not, shall be available on one card, against which application for a driver's license can be checked. It is expected that this central violations bureau will be the means of eventually eliminating many dangerous drivers who might never get into serious criminal or civil suits as the result of their mishaps.

The Michigan State Police cooperate fully in building up this file. With complete cooperation of officials throughout the state, it is visualized that if a Detroit man, for example, is involved in a crash in Marquette, for instance, it would be only a matter of routine, a few days later, to enter this fact on his card, in the central violations file. He would be confronted with his record when he applied for his driver's license. The secretary of state may refuse to issue these licenses for cause.

END OF RELIEF, FARM LENDING BELIEVED NEAR

"Cooperative Institutions Built to Stand on Own Feet," Myers Says

"As farm conditions improve — and we believe they will improve — we expect the government to retire from the business of lending government money to farmers and we believe and hope this will be accomplished by 1938. This should eliminate from the Farm Credit Administration all emergency government credit and confine its loans entirely to the granting of cooperative credit on a cooperative basis."

This statement by Governor W. I. Myers of the Farm Credit Administration points to a trend that has been increasingly evident in the Seventh Farm Credit district, according to Land Bank officials in St. Paul, the trend towards better conditions and a decrease in emergency lending. For instance, applications for loans this year have aggregated only about one-third as much as for last year, due to decreasing emergency demands. Governor Myers outlines the approaching substitution of business credit for "subsidized credit," in these words:

"I believe farmers do not want a continuing credit subsidy and the permanent institutions of the Farm Credit Administration are set up in such a way that the farmer-borrowers from these cooperative institutions may eventually own all of the capital stock in them and the voting power which goes along with such stock.

"The federal land banks, production credit associations and other cooperative credit institutions are built to stand on their own feet. The government has loaned farmers a part of the capital necessary for their credit business; and these institutions cannot be truly cooperative until the government capital is paid back.

"Farm cooperation is not a magic word but a method of doing business and farm credit cooperation can help farmers get credit at just as low a cost as any other type of people can obtain it."

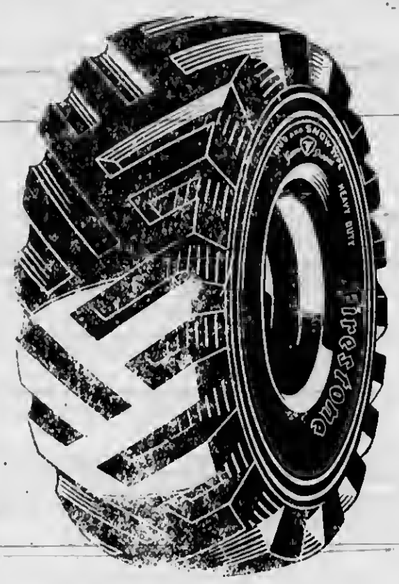
The point of the governor's remarks was that the purpose of the Farm Credit Administration is not to lend government money but to "buy credit for farmers from the investment markets at the lowest possible cost." He added:

"The cooperative credit institutions under the Farm Credit Administration are organized to make loans, not primarily to suit the lender's convenience but to meet the needs of farmers and take into consideration their point of view so far as that can be done on a sound basis. I think farmers are prepared to accept the responsibility as well as the benefits of this cooperative service."

Firestone

You Are Not Equipped for Winter Driving with "Worn Out" Tires On Your Car!

CHANGE TO FIRESTONES NOW AND BE READY WHEN WINTER ARRIVES!



This is the season of the year when every motorist should make it a definite matter of business to see to it that his car is properly prepared for winter driving. With the approach of cold weather and heavy snows every motorist naturally thinks of alcohol or some other solution for his radiator to guard against the danger of a "freeze up" and he thinks of having his engine placed in condition for the long, hard pull through winter. In the process of getting the car ready for winter driving, it is equally as important to see that good tires are installed to insure safe and steady driving over all kinds of roads.

In the installation of new tires it is of utmost importance that tires for winter driving should have a deep, heavy tread so that when the occasion suddenly arises for you to apply the brakes, the proper tread is there to bring the car to a sudden stop. Here is where Firestone excels—with a deep, heavy tread that will suddenly stop your car when your brakes are applied. Examine your tires now when you are checking over your car for winter—and change to Firestones. Then you'll be ready for winter driving on all kinds of roads and in all kinds of weather.

Firestone's Gum-Dipping process insulates every strand in every cord with a coating of the highest grade of liquid rubber. Extra rubber is molded into the tire to give you longer wear and better service. The Gum-Dipping process is an exclusive Firestone feature and is your guarantee that you will get all the service from these famous tires that any motorist would expect.

Visit the Firestone dealer listed below. He is prepared to serve you and will be most appreciative for an opportunity to serve you.

EASY TO PRESERVE MEATS BY CANNING

Saves Marketing Time; Permits Buying Quantities At Lower Prices

During the fall or winter when farmers are butchering livestock, both farm women and city home makers can preserve supplies of meat for future use by canning it, according to the nutrition experts at Michigan State College.

Either glass or tin cans can be used but both should be processed in a steam cooker to avoid danger of losing meat from spoilage. The principal difference in handling the two types of cans is that the air must be exhausted from the tin cans by placing the filled cans unsealed in boiling water for eight minutes before sealing them to place in the cooker; glass jars are placed in the cooker without completely tightening the tops, processed, and then completely sealed when taken from the cooker.

Good cuts of meat can be canned and will furnish very tempting meals months later, or the cheaper cuts can be preserved and used for meat pies, stews, or other meat dishes. This permits the housewife to buy meat by the quarter and have the advantage of the lower price.

The meat should be thoroughly cooled out before canning. This cooling requires two or three days after butchering. Searing the meat before packing it improves the flavor, shrinks the meat, and partially heats it. Lean portions of the meat should not be pierced with forks while searing it.

Place the meat in clean hot jars and add one teaspoonful of salt per pint. No water is needed. Fill the cans to within one-half inch of the top. The water level in the cooker should reach the rack. Permit steam to escape from the petcock for from five to seven minutes; then close the petcock and count the processing time from the moment the pressure reaches the desired point.

The time of processing at 15 pounds pressure should be one hour for No. 2 tin cans and for pint glass jars; allow 70 minutes time for No. 3 cans and for quart glass jars. At the correct time, remove the cooker from the fire and permit it to cool. The pressure is allowed to fall to zero without opening the cooker petcock when glass jars are processed, but the petcock may be opened slowly to hasten cooling when using tin cans. Glass jars should be sealed immediately and set away to cool. Tin cans may be plunged into cold water.

All jars should be tested to find if the sealing has been perfectly done. Improperly sealed jars should be emptied and the processing repeated. Only one-third as much processing is given if it is done immediately. Cans should be wiped dry before they are placed in storage.

Corned beef, ground meat, sausage, heart, and liver can be canned as well as the cuts more commonly used. Further directions are needed for canning some of the special cuts, these directions will be given to anyone who will write the home economics department at East Lansing.

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT WILL HIRE 25,000 MEN

Will Take Employes from Relief and Unemployment Lists

More than 25,000 men from relief and unemployment lists are expected to be at work during the present fiscal year on the State Highway Department's $20,500,000 construction program.

The employment figure is determined on the basis of 1,500 hours equaling the work of one man for one year, Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner, said that this employment estimate may scale as high as 35,000 if anticipated additions are made to the program.

The program calls for 35,000,000 man hours of labor, divided as follows: direct labor, 16,068,000 man hours; immediate indirect labor, 13,100,000 man hours; and latent or indirect labor, 5,831,000 man hours.

"It has been thoroughly demonstrated that in all type of road, bridge and grade separation construction more than 30 cent out of each dollar spent goes for wages and salaries," Commissioner Van Wagoner said.

Based on the $20,500,000 program, the division will distribute $8,031,000 in direct wages and salaries; $7,210,000 immediate indirect wages and salaries; and $3,502,000 in latent indirect wages and salaries, leaving $1,851,000 for ownership, which is that portion which cannot be traced directly to re-expenditure. Eventually a major part of the ownership portion will be expended for labor.

WHO IS WEST MICHIGAN OLDEST RESORTER

Tourist and Resort Assn. Trying to Locate This Man or Woman

Who is the oldest resorter in Western Michigan? The West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association is trying to locate the man or woman who has been summering in Western Michigan for the greatest number of years.

Although the association has grown up with 18 years of service behind it, the resort business in Michigan is much older than the organized effort to foster it. Bay View, Harbor Springs, Charlevoix, South Haven, all date back half a century or more in resort history.

Michigan may have been a summer resort even in pre-historic days for records show that some of the Ottawa Indians of the Grand Traverse region frequently migrated in winter to the Kankakee River territory of Illinois and returned to their homes on Lake Michigan for the fishing and hunting during the summer and to raise their crops.

Nominations have been coming in, ranging from 10 to 50 years of continuous summer residence in West Michigan. There are even some third generations of Michigan resorters coming up in the search. But help is needed in finding West Michigan's first or oldest resorter.

NEW MARKET FOUND FOR MICHIGAN BEANS

Ten carloads of Michigan beans are moving to San Francisco canners, via Baltimore and the Panama Canal. This is the first quantity sale ever made of Michigan beans to this company. The purchasing agent of the cannery told the Michigan sales agency that Michigan beans were exactly what this company wanted.

The sale is very encouraging as California grown beans have been one of the chief competitors with the Michigan product. Assurance was given by the buyers that larger quantities would be bought if the present shipment meets expectations.

Tasty Stuffings for Flavor and Economy

Last week I boasted that I have never told housewives what kind of stuffing to use for their Thanksgiving fowl. This statement was true, and I hope with all my heart I can not, however, restrain from giving you a few of my own favorite stuffing recipes. The greatest chefs of all parts of the world have all given the importance of tasty stuffing for meat, fowl and fish. Delicious in itself a stuffing adds flavor to the meat or fowl and is also economical inasmuch as it makes a small roast or fowl go almost twice as far in serving. Here are some of my stuffing recipes. I hope you will like them.

Sage and Onion Stuffing for Turkey and Chicken

2-3 cup fat, ½ cup chopped onions, 3 quarts soft bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, 1 tablespoon or more sage, 2 tablespoons, chopped parsley.

Cook onion in hot fat until almost tender. Add soft bread crumbs mixed with seasonings and cook until bread is thoroughly heated and well mixed with onion.

Mint Stuffing for Lamb

4 cups bread crumbs, ½ teaspoon nutmeg, ½ teaspoon allspice, ½ teaspoon sage, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon thyme, dash of black pepper, 1 egg slightly beaten, ½ cup melted butter, ½ cup fresh mint leaves chopped fine.

Combine bread crumbs, seasonings, butter, salt, pepper and mint leaves. Add egg and beat well. Add celery, if desired.

Peanut Stuffing for Pork

Mix ingredients as listed.

Cucumber Stuffing for Fish

2 cups chopped cucumbers, 2 tablespoons bacon, chopped, 1 onion, chopped, 1 tablespoon melted butter, ½ cup chopped mushrooms, 1 cup soft bread crumbs, 2 eggs slightly beaten, salt and pepper.

Mix ingredients in order given and use to stuff 2 to 4 pound fish.

Chestnut Stuffing for Any Fowl

1 loaf bread, ½ cup melted butter, salt, pepper, 1 cup cooked chestnuts, ½ teaspoon cinnamon.

Break bread into small pieces. Add melted butter, salt, pepper and cinnamon. Toss together lightly with fork until thoroughly mixed.

Apple Stuffing for Goose

4 cups sliced cooking apples, 1 loaf bread, ½ cup melted butter, salt and pepper.

Spinach Stuffing for Roasts

[illegible] cups bread crumbs, ½ cup melted butter, [illegible] teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, 2 cups cooked spinach, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 2 hard cooked eggs, chopped.

Mix bread crumbs with the pepper, salt and butter. Cook two minutes, stirring constantly. Put the spinach to one side of the pan, melt the rest of the butter in the empty part, add the flour and mix with the bread crumbs so that the crumbs absorb the butter. Mix the spinach and crumbs together and stir until somewhat dry. The spinach will become more as the stuffing cooks because the meat

BASKETBALL SEASON OPENS FRIDAY

PELLSTON, ELLSWORTH COME FOR DOUBLE-HEADER

Contests First on Fourteen-Game Schedule—Charlevoix Has Wealth of Good Material This Year

Friday evening, November 29th, brings the opening of the 1935-36 basketball schedule for Charlevoix High school, and during the balance of the winter this sport will provide the major interest for followers of high school athletics.

The initial contests on a 14-game schedule providing a double bill, bring Pellston and Ellsworth, Class D schools, who opened the season here in the same manner a year ago.

Deviating from last year's procedure, however, two different Charlevoix teams will take the floor, the varsity meeting Pellston, and the reserves taking on Max Novak's Ellsworth tossers. Last year Coach Kipke used first string players against both visiting teams to win both contests.

If wealth of material is the governing factor, Charlevoix will have an A-1 team this season. Fifty-three candidates have been out since practice started. They have been split up into teams and practice sessions have been held both afternoon and evening to give all training. The outstanding players have been placed on the varsity, first and second squads, and from this standing down they level off with a couple squads composed entirely of Freshmen. Stewart Dolvinan is assisting with the coaching duties.

Unless last minute changes are made, the varsity squad Coach Kipke places on the floor against Pellston for the initial game Friday night will be composed of Bob Pearl and Ed. Radke, forwards; Dan Gallagher, center; Joe Schwab and Keith Carey, guards. Pearl, Radke and Schwab are veterans from last year's team. The second team is composed of Charles Scott and Floyd Eccleston, forwards; Emil Olach, center; Les Shapton and Bob Livingston, guards. The third team roster has Bert Pearl and Charles Richardson, forwards; Bob Neff and Leo Fairbanks, centers; Harrison Bedford, Bruce Withers and Emerald LaBlanc, guards.

After Friday night's contest, Charlevoix cagers will not appear on the home court again until December 27th, when Petoskey comes here for a return game.

For the benefit of fans, Coach Kipke is calling attention to several changes in rules governing play this year. The first provides that on jump balls at the free throw line all players except the jumpers must remain outside the free throw circle until the ball is tapped. Another provides that if the free throw resulting from a personal foul is successful, the ball is to be put into play from out of bounds. The third provides that a player may not remain in his free throw area, with or without the ball, for more than three seconds while the ball is in play and in possession or control of his team. This rule is a restriction on the "pivot-post" or "bucket" play.

KIWANIS PLAN BENEFIT ENTERTAINMENT DEC. 5

Bring Marquis, Magician, to Raise Money for Xmas Children's Fund

This stunt take place at 2:30 o'clock. The Marquis will be blindfolded by a competent person and will drive away as calmly as a man with his eyes wide open.

The evening entertainment, two hours of new, original and startling magic, will be held in the high school gymnasium, starting at 8:15. Proceeds of the entertainment will be used to purchase Christmas gifts for unfortunate children.

WINTER TAX RATE SLIGHTLY LOWER

SCHOOL OPERATING AND DEBT SERVICE DECREASED

No Tax Spread for State Purposes, County Apportionment Larger; Rate Is $22.18 Per Thousand

Winter taxes which become payable on December 2nd at the office of City Treasurer Robert E. Rife, will be lower than last year, according to figures just released.

The rate spread by the city assessor will be $22.18 per thousand dollars valuation, as compared to $23.70 last year and $28.36 before the 15 mill tax limitation law went into effect.

Spread against the city valuation the winter tax charged to Charlevoix property owners will appear per thousand dollars valuation as follows:

County	$10.91
Schools	1.85
School debt	6.42
Total	$22.18

The 1934 tax roll figures were:

County	$ 9.18
School	5.78
State	.68
School debt	7.76
Total	$23.70

Contributing largely to this year's drop in tax rate is the reduction in the amounts spread for school operating and debt service, the total absence of any tax for state purposes. School operating was decreased 93 cents per thousand and school debt service $1.34 per thousand. Had the county spread been the same figure as last year, local property owners would be paying a tax of $20.76.

Winter taxes go for county and school purposes. The county realizes funds for general operating expenses and activities of the county poor commission, bond retirement, etc. The schools receive a portion for operating expenses and a debt service which, in Charlevoix's case, goes for retirement of indebtedness incurred by construction of the new grade building and gymnasium.

Taxes are payable without four per cent penalty for collection until January 9th, unless the penalty limit is later extended.

Twenty Projects Under Way Monday Morning—13 In Charlevoix, 5 In Antrim, 2 In Otsego County

All employable men and women certified from welfare offices in Charlevoix, Antrim and Otsego counties to the National Re-Employment office in Petoskey were absorbed on WPA projects when work opened Monday morning.

This statement was made by D. T. McHugh, director of the district offices here. It is believed this is the first Northern Michigan district to absorb all welfare clients up to present certifications.

Approximately 1,500 men and women have been assigned. Projects under way Monday totaled 20, of which 13 are in Charlevoix county, five in Antrim and two in Otsego.

The list of projects are:

Charlevoix county — Superintendent's residence at Young State Park, pipe line and reservoir at Boyne Falls, water front improvement and dock at Boyne City, water front improvement at East Jordan, Charlevoix municipal dock, Charlevoix city-wide landscaping, Charlevoix recreational field, Charlevoix tax research, Lake Michigan scenic highway in Charlevoix and Norwood townships, Advance-East Jordan road resurfacing, four miles resurface M-66, East Jordan-Charlevoix, Beaver Island highway project, sewing comforters at Boyne City.

All Charlevoix projects opened are progressing nicely. Clearing right-of-way and grading is under way on the Lake Michigan scenic drive in Charlevoix township. Base for the half-mile cinder track at the recreational field is being prepared and the city-wide landscaping program is well under way. Work on the municipal dock has advanced to a stage where arrival of material is causing delay.

FISHING LICENSE SALES HIT RECORD

OVER HALF MILLION SOLD TO NOVEMBER 13

Receipts to Date for All Types of Licenses Issued Totals $553,706—Expect 1936 Record

The popularity of Michigan's low-priced resident and non-resident sport fishing licenses is again attested by a record-smashing sale.

Up to November 13 more Michigan fishing licenses of various kinds have been sold by license dealers than in any previous year in the state's history.

"We already have 553,706 sport fishing licenses sold and receipts returned by license dealers," said Stanley G. Fontanna, Division and Finance of the Department of Conservation. "This is well in excess of the total sale of all kinds of sport fishing licenses for 1934 and it is conservatively estimated that at least 50,000 additional sales will be reported during the month and a half of the current year remaining.

"This would bring our total sales for 1935 well over the 600,000 mark, a substantial increase over the record for 1931 which was a little in excess of 540,000 sales.

"Receipts for licenses sold this year up to November 13 total nearly $350,000. This money, of course, is placed in the game-protection fund to finance the operations of state hatcheries, rearing ponds, general fisheries operations and partially to cover the cost of law-enforcement and other departmental expenses."

Resident	$449,420
Non-resident annual	25,698
Non-resident, 10-day	53,147
Non-resident wife	25,441
Total	$553,706

"We have every reason to expect that sales in 1936 will surpass or at least equal our 1935 record," Mr. Fontanna said. "In anticipation of another record sale we are distributing in excess of 700,000 fishing licenses for next year.

"These licenses, together with the new 1936 revision of the digest of fishing laws, are now in the hands of the printers and will be ready for distribution to license dealers and sportsmen during the first part of December."

Little Local Interest Shown So Far by Prospective Enrollees

Local school officials are still awaiting further information regarding the establishment of a Freshman College here this winter under the WPA program.

In the meantime, only slight interest has been shown in such a project were it to materialize. Few have so far expressed a desire of taking advantage of the proposed courses.

CHRISTMAS SEAL DRIVE THURSDAY

1935 CAMPAIGN TO OPEN ON THANKSGIVING DAY

Sixty-Two Million Tuberculosis Christmas Seals Mailed for the Fight Against White Plague

Sixty-two million tuberculosis Christmas seals went out in the mails this week to homes all over Michigan, officials of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association announce. Twelve million seals were mailed direct from the association's offices in Lansing, and the balance was distributed by affiliated organizations throughout the state.

Providing funds to carry on Michigan's fight against the White Plague during 1936, the twenty-fourth annual sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals will be opened officially Thanksgiving Day and will be continued through to Christmas. Last-minute orders this week swelled the total number of seals distributed by 4,500,000 and caused officials of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association to feel that a substantial increase over the 1934 mark would be recorded this year.

After weeks of preparing the seals for the mail, the association's staff of workers is standing by until Friday, when the opening and sorting of returns will commence.

Theodore J. Werle, executive secretary of the association, announced this week that ministers and clergy all over the state had been invited to participate in "Christmas Seal Sunday," December 1. On the evening of the same day a special Christmas seal program will be presented over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Company, the time being 10:30 to 11 p. m. and the Michigan outlets stations WXYZ and WOOD.

On Thanksgiving Day, from 4:15 to 5 p. m., Dr. Bruce H. Douglas, president of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, will speak over the Michigan Radio Network. He will be preceded by two rapid-fire announcers who will attempt new records for presenting breath-taking highlights of man's fight against tuberculosis.

PENSION GIVEN TO COUNTY AGED

FIFTY-FOUR RECEIVING AID UNDER NEW LAW

Assistance Ranges From $5 to $14 Per Month Depending Upon Need—Many Applications Pending

Fifty-four applications for state old age pension from Charlevoix county have been approved at Lansing and checks mailed to the applicants, according to Probate Judge Ervan A. Rhegsegger, who is handling the old age pension matters for the county.

Judge Rhegsegger explained that 11 received pension under the old law, and that 12 have been added under the new law. The average payment is $10 per month, with the law at $5 and the high at $12.—Some families are drawing $15 where the application of both husband and wife is approved. The county distribution is as follows: East Jordan 18, Boyne City 14, Charlevoix 12, Boyne Falls 9, Clarion 1, Walloon Lake 1.

Within another month more applications now pending will be approved, Judge Rhegsegger stated. There are many more applications pending here and elsewhere. In the state at present over 11,000 persons are getting assistance compared with 1,000 under the repealed Head Tax Law.

Lack of funds is preventing the bureau doing as much as it would like to, it was explained. The Legislature appropriated $2,000,000 for each year of the current biennium and this was reduced by five per cent under an economy order of the administration. It is hoped that more state money and some federal aid can be procured in the future to allow pension payments to be increased, Dr. Callahan said.

There is no fixed sum that is paid to every individual, but the payment is based on actual need. Some persons need more than others and the amounts are distributed as equitably as possible in order to make the small amount of money stretch around.

Judge Rhegsegger explained the least understood part of the application that provision that the recipient must give a trust deed to the state for any property owned.

The theory of this provision is that if there are children or other persons "responsible under the law of this state" they, in the event of the death of the applicant will get the property. The State Legislature did not intend that the taxpayers of the state would be asked to take from children or other responsible persons, the burden of supporting an aged person, and then step aside, after death of the aged person, and allow the children to enjoy the proceeds or use of the real estate. The state asks only for its due from the real estate after the death of the aged beneficiary, the state sells the property, pays last sickness and funeral expenses, and deducts the total pension paid, plus interest at three and one-half per cent a year and divides the balance, if any, among the heirs, when the estate is probated.

CONSERVATION DEPT. NOTES

State-owned lands are expected to put approximately $100,000 into Michigan's general fund this year in royalties, rentals, bonuses and fees from the oil industry.

Nearly 50,000 Montana grayling have been brought to fingerling size at Wolf Lake state fish hatchery near Kalamazoo for experimental planting in selected streams. They will be planted this fall.

In the hope of being able to create a state park surrounding the Upper and Lower falls of Tahquamenon River, the Department of Conservation has entered negotiations with Cleveland Cliffs Mining Company, owners, to ascertain whether an option can be obtained on the falls and the intervening river frontage.

In spite of difficulties encountered in transporting supplies from the Michigan mainland, the work of live trapping moose on Isle Royale is now fully under way.

Two adult moose, a bull and a cow, have been live-trapped by representatives of the Department of Conservation and now are held in a corral, awaiting removal to the mainland. The cow moose was taken November 10; the bull shortly after.

Bait dealers supplying caddis fly larvae to winter bluegill and perch fishermen will have to seek a new source of supply this season.

A law passed by the 1935 Legislature forbids the removal of caddis fly and other insect larvae and insects from any trout stream of the state, except under permit from the Director of Conservation or for personal use in fishing the trout stream where taken.

Disguising Thanksgiving Left-Overs

By now you're probably so full of Thanksgiving dinner that you feel you'll never want to eat again, but something must be done with all the left-overs from the big feast, and strange as it may seem, your family will come home tonight a hungry as ever had been no Thanksgiving dinner. So let's get together and see what can be done with the odds and ends. First, if there's enough cold turkey, it's always grand sliced cold with scalloped dressing, hot giblet gravy and green salad. You may start the dinner out with creamed potato soup which will take care of any left-over mashed potatoes and onions. With a plain fruit for dessert, the most critical family should be satisfied and happy, so here is our best menu:

Creamed Potato and Onion Soup
with Croutons
Cold Sliced Turkey
Cold Sliced Stuffing
Hot Giblet Gravy
Whole Wheat and White Bread
Fruit
Coffee Milk

Creamed Potato and Onion Soup

2 cups milk, 1 cup cooked onion, 1 cup mashed potatoes, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 tablespoon flour, salt and pepper.

Heat the milk, onion and potato. Strain. Melt butter and add flour and blend. Add milk and potato mixture, slowly. Heat to boiling point, stirring constantly. Season to taste and serve hot with croutons.

Croutons

Remove crusts from bread; cut slices ½ inch thick. Cut these slices into cubes ½ inch wide. Place in pan with butter in hot oven, turning them to brown and become buttered evenly.

If you want something really different, the following menu with recipes will not only take care of your problem, but will prove delicious and popular:

Vegetable Soufflé
Creamed Turkey in Croustades
Green Salad
Apple Sauce Tarts
Coffee Milk

Vegetable Soufflé

2 cups cooked vegetables, 1 cup soft bread crumbs, 1½ cups milk, ½ teaspoon salt, 4 tablespoons melted butter, ½ cup grated cheese, 4 eggs.

Mash or cut cooked vegetables fine and measure. Soak crumbs in milk. Add butter, salt, cheese, slightly beaten egg yolks and vegetables to the crumbs and mixture. Fold in stiffly beaten whites. Bake in well greased casserole or ring mold. Bake at 375 degrees about 45 minutes, or until firm. Serves six.

Croustades

Cut white bread into 1½ or 2 inch slices. Remove crusts and cut slices into squares, triangles or any desired shape. Form into cases by carefully removing center crumbs, leaving the wall around the sides and bottom about 1-3 inch thick. Place cases on baking sheet in a slow oven to dry. Before they start to brown, take from oven and brush with melted butter, then return to oven to brown.

Apple Sauce Tarts

Bake six individual pastry shells. When cooked, place two marshmallows in each, and cover with one-quarter cup apple sauce. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) about 20 minutes, or until marshmallows melt and form a light crust.

Of course, eventually all turkey leads to the soup pot, but don't frown—try this recipe and I'll guarantee the family will request a return engagement:

Turkey Soup

When there's nothing left of the Thanksgiving turkey but memories and bones, break the bones and put them in a good-sized kettle and cover with cold water. Add one large onion, diced; two large celery stalks, using leaves too; one large carrot diced, a bay leaf, two whole cloves, a bud of garlic and salt and pepper. Cook for at least two hours, adding more water if necessary to make one quart of soup. Strain and add any flavor gravy.

CHAPTER 1

While she waited Antoinette remembered something; she was nervous not excited, and it seemed easier to stand. Except for herself, there was nobody in the place.

There had been an inky, shabby, cold-looking boy in a suit too small for him sitting at the battered and inky desk, spearing vainly at flies with an old pen. But he had disappeared through the glass-topped splintered door marked "Editor, Private," to tell Mr. Lawrence Bellamy, editor of the San Francisco Journal of Commerce and Business, that Miss Antonietta Tafi was waiting to see him.

Rain was falling in gray sheets. Traffic swished and hooked on Montgomery Street.

The boy returned; Mr. Bellamy would be free in a minute. Antoinette sat down, her heart beating fast, and perforce looked about the waiting room of the Journal.

Antoinette was seeking for a job.

"You kin go in now," the boy said, not moving any muscle of his entire person except those involved in the toneless speech. Antoinette rose graciously. In her heart she said, "Mr. Bellamy told him to keep me waiting exactly five minutes.' Ha! Just to make himself important—"

But when she stepped into the editor's office she revised her opinion. There was a fat young man in a café-au-lait raincoat in the revolving chair opposite that of Mr. Lawrence Bellamy.

"I wish you'd let me send you our figures?" said this individual engagingly, rising as Antoinette came in.

"I won't!" said Mr. Bellamy.

"May I leave you my card?" asked the visitor.

"Sure!" the editor agreed. The young man took out his fountain pen and wrote on the card, and Antoinette took the vacated chair. She saw the older man, lolling in his seat, glance at her card. "Miss Tafi?" he asked. "Funny thing—my mother's brother was Taffi Baldwin," he said.

"They're both good New England names," Antoinette said, with a slight effort to seem friendly and at ease.

"Your people from Boston?"

"My father's family was. But his father came round the Horn in 'Forty-nine." Antoinette went through the usual little story smilingly. She was still terrified of the editor—any editor—but he was rather less frightening than most of them.

He was dark, his brown face thin; his aquiline large nose gave a sort of autocratic significance to his face. His hands were big and lean, his mouth large, his dark thick hair was in an untidy tumble, and he wore glasses.

"Job, eh?" he began. Antoinette only smiled deprecatingly. "What experience have you had?"

"Not much—on newspapers. I did the social column for the Bulletin for two weeks. Then Margaret Russell—my friend, who had got me into it—came back from her vacation."

"That was the only work you ever did?"

"Oh, no." Antoinette smiled ruefully. "I've done lots of other things," she confessed. "I was in the Mercantile library for a year, and then in Younger's bookstore, helping my older sister."

"I know Paul Younger well," Mr. Bellamy said, with what appeared to be characteristic amusing irrelevance. "Nice fellow—dreamer, but that's all right. Your sister work there?"

"You'd identify her because she's tall and dark, and she wears her hair—" Antoinette made a gesture. One always made this gesture in describing Brenda's crown of braids.

"I know; young girl, rather pretty, wears turned-down collars; 'bout twenty-four or five?"

"Just the two of you?"

"Two brothers, Cliff and Bruce."

"Mother and father?"

"No, we lost them years ago. But my aunt, Miss Bruce, lives with us."

Pain Passes Off

When your head aches; when Neuralgia tortures you; when Muscular Pains make you miserable—take a Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pill.

Mr. Smith is one of millions who have found this easy way to prompt relief. He says:—

"I keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills in my pocket and when I get a dull heavy feeling in my head, I take a Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pill and the pain passes off."

DR. MILES'
-ANTI-PAIN PILLS-

"And you think you'd like a job on a newspaper? No social stuff on—"

"I know, you know."

"I know. I know it's a commercial page." Now was her time to show that she was an up-to-date business girl. "It's that I was thinking, Mr. Bellamy, why shouldn't the Journal have a page of society news and of business interest for women, recipes and a puzzle or two?"

She was doing it on a sudden feel under the effect of his narrowing look and slowly shaking head. "I—I thought perhaps you'd like it, might like to have a woman's point of view—"

"Not a chance," Bellamy said, getting to his feet. "Leave your name and address with the boy, and I'll let you know if anything comes up."

"No!" Antoinette was not to put on more advertising for the Journal. "Let me explain the whole thing to you," the editor said. He began absently to doodle on it, illustrating figures with a pencil. Antoinette, feigning concentration, saw that he had no eyes.

"Now, I'll tell you what I'll do, Miss Tafi," Lawrence Bellamy said finally. "I've got a new man on here to rustle the ads up; only had him two weeks, and I don't know how he's going to turn out. I'll give him another week, and then why don't you get in on this? I'll bet him keep whatever he's got, and I'll tell him that you're going after the department stores and the milliners and the tea rooms, how's that? You get forty per cent of what you bring in. The fellow that did have it, Hansen, used to clean up about fifty a week on it."

"And You Think You'd Like a Job on a Newspaper?"

"And meanwhile—" they were standing now—"meanwhile I'll ask Mrs. Bellamy what she thinks of any women's stuff in the Journal," the editor said, gobbling her toward the door. "She gives me pretty good steers sometimes!"

Antoinette bowed a smiling farewell, went out into the dark, woodeny, inky hall, and walked down two flights to the street. The whole morning had been an utter waste of time.

Rain was still falling heavily; there was no use going home; nobody was there. Aunt Meggy would be at the sewing society meeting, Bruce was in school, Cliff at the office, Brenda at the store.

Antoinette wandered past the Hall of Justice and the little park whose green leaves were tossing in the warm sticky rain, and went idly along the narrow streets of Chinatown. Somehow she was still smarting over the recent interview with the handsome, aristocratic editor of the Journal. While they had been talking, he had told her something of his own history. He had graduated very young from Harvard, and after some experiences on college periodicals had become associated with a financial journal in New York, had married almost immediately, had continued in newspaper work ever since. The present venture in San Francisco was new but already seemed to shed with success. He was only thirty-one or -two, Antoinette judged, probably less than ten years older than her self, he was pleased with life, sure of himself and his job! It was "this idea" to do this, and "this man" to do that; he could smile down, he could deprecatingly shake away her poor little suggestions; he was full of suggestions and ideas himself.

After all she would go home to lunch. She climbed into a car on Market street. Presently she entered the doorway of a dilapidated building that contained eight five-room flats on four floor levels. Steep wooden steps, peeling and paintless, led up from the street that ran for blocks between the shabbiest and least interesting of the city's dwellings. Almost all the windows had little signs on them, little confessions of poverty and failure. "Modes," "Violin Studio," "Rooms," "Home Board" said the signs, patient and dusty for year after year.

There were no signs on the Taft windows; the fog kept out windows, anyway, above the eaves of the crowding buildings. On the right at the narrow entrance hall there was the doorway of a dark bedroom. Antoinette's and Brenda's room, where one must always snap on a light. Lighted, however, it was a pleasant room enough, with a great window that was always open, on an airshaft, and an oblique upward view of the sky.

Next to this bedroom was the bathroom, dark and dank, with a smell of ammonia and yellow soap on Fridays when Archie came to clean, and an unpleasant odor of plumbing, rotting wood, damp rags, and plaster at other times. Then came Aunt Meg's room; the last bedroom in the house, small but bright, for it looked out across the southern city and Twin Peaks, and shared with the sitting room next to it the only exposed side of the apartment. No one ever entered Aunt Meg's room except when she was ill, so that it reduced the apartment, strictly speaking, to four rooms. Of these one, on the other side of the hall, was a small dark hole originally intended for an occasional servant, and now occupied contentedly enough by seventeen-year-old Bruce, who had a very treasure-house of broken cameras, nails, tools, radio equipment, guns and cartridges on table, window ledge, bureau, mingling in casually with his shirts and collars. The other was a full-sized kitchen with a skylight upon whose dusty face the rain was hammering and dancing again, as Antoinette came in.

The kitchen clock said twenty minutes past two. Antoinette made herself a luxurious meal of brown toast and tea. There was a saucer of stewed tomatoes in the icebox; one sardine. She grilled the sardine, scrambled an egg in the tomato sauce, and presently carried an epicurean tray in to the sitting-room window; found her book, The Father Brown Stories, and settled down for an hour of sheer pleasure. The rain, the discouraging editors, the depressing downtown streets, the condition of the family budget were all forgot; Antoinette was in London streets, in London clubs and shallos, following a shabby cassock through strange and dramatic adventures.

After a while the food was gone, and the rain had disappeared, too. Antoinette put her head down on her arms and sat motionless for some fifteen minutes. Then suddenly she sprang up, her book coasting to the floor, and snatching up the tray fled rather than walked with it to the kitchen. Cup, spoons, plate into the dishpan, hot water, tray tipped up on the dresser again, teapot rinsed and turned upside down—

Antoinette worked as if whips were driving her. She went into the bedroom and came out with two waists and several pairs of stockings, took a basin from the damp, vegetable-scented back porch, rinsed and soaped busily. Her electric iron was plugged in, and a board brought from the same back porch, which was, fortunately spacious, and served as a storeroom.

Meanwhile, with characteristic fatal determination to be thorough, Antoinette was starting several other things and planning in her busy brain to do more. She hung the waists daintily on hangers in the sitting room, put the dish towels on to boil, took out the stove tray and slid it into the sink to give it a thorough cleaning, brought her sewing materials into the kitchen to catch up a run in the stocking and the split heel of another, and poured a bag of peas into a pan.

"I really ought to find an old sheet and re-cover that ironing board—we'll only burn the blanket right through at this rate—I wonder if there's an old sheet in Aunt Meggy's room?"

The window had been left open, and Jingle had performed his favorite trick of coming along the back porch and over the roof and down the fire escape, and so making a leap into his favorite spot, in the center of Aunt Meggy's bed. His paws had, of course, been thick with soot and mud, and more than that, he had knocked to the floor the little flower vase that Aunt Meggy always kept before Grandma's picture; violets and water were everywhere.

"Yes, and you know you're a bad cat!" Antoinette said gribly, as he leaped gayly past her in the kitchen. She repaired the damage gingerly; her own hands were far from clean. Presently she went into the bathroom to wash them and was in there when Brenda came home a moment later.

"Hello-oo!"

"Brenda, my darling, you're early!" Antoinette kissed her sister affectionately. "Darling, what time is it?" she asked, going on with the wilding of her hands.

It isn't five yet. But it was so dark, and so like rain again, and appearances or accountants were there, or something. Anyway, Paul," said Brenda, who usually spoke of her employer thus familiarly, "told us we all could go home."

She was as tall as Antoinette, but more slender, with a certain fastidious delicacy of build and expression.

"Why, it's good to get home!" she exclaimed. Presently she followed Antoinette's example and changed her damp clothes for a house dress. Then she sat down in the kitchen to watch Antoinette finish the ironing.

Somebody To See You!

IF EVERYBODY with something to interest you should come and ring your bell, what nuisance it would be! Think of the swarming, jostling crowd, the stamping of feet on your porch and carpets!

Every day we know of many callers who come to see you. They never jangle the bell—they don't take up your whole day trying to get your attention. Instead, they do it in a way that is most considerate of your privacy and your convenience. They advertise in your newspaper.

In this way you have only to listen to those you know at a glance have something that interests you. They make it short, too, so you can gather quickly just what you want to know. You can receive and hear them all without noise or confusion in a very few minutes.

In fairness to yourself look over all the advertisements. The smallest and the largest—you never can be sure which one will tell something you really want to know.

You can depend on advertised goods. It pays to read the advertisements.

FARM INCOME GAINS IN MOST SECTIONS

Producers Have Share In Better Returns from Crops and Stock

In the group of states in which Michigan is included, receipts were 23 per cent larger in the first nine month of this year than last, due chiefly to the higher level of income from livestock. Should farmers in this region maintain volume marketings of meat animals at about the same level compared with last year for the remainder of 1935, and should there be no material decline in prices for cattle, calves and hogs, the cash receipts in the region should continue to improve over the corresponding months in 1934. The larger prospective corn output this year is another favorable factor, indicating higher income during October, November and December.

TED GRAVELIN HOME IS GUTTED BY BLAZE

Family Return From Deer Hunting to Find Home In Ruins

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Gravelin was gutted by fire believed to have started from an overheated chimney at 1:30 Sunday afternoon.

Practically all furnishings of the home were destroyed.

PENNIES, NICKELS, DIMES WELCOME IN WILL ROGERS FUND

Pennies, nickels and dimes are welcome in the Will Rogers Memorial contribution boxes in the two Charlevoix banks.

Some people throughout the country are withholding contributions because they think the small amounts they can afford are undesired, according to the Will Rogers Memorial Commission, which will have charge of using the money collected in the nation-wide campaign to establish memorials to the memory of the famous actor and philanthropist.

The commission called this idea "nonsense." Small contributions of a million would be preferred to large contributions by a comparative few. The commission desires that the fund express the sentiment of the many friends and admirers of Will Rogers, who had friends in every walk of life.

So remember, dimes are just as welcome as crisp bills in the deposit containers. Children as well as adults may take part in the fund.

LEGION ACTIVITIES
By F. V. Tyler

The Thanksgiving feather party at the Home, Tuesday evening, was a great success from every standpoint. There was a fine crowd and the post members want to thank the public most sincerely for their hearty support.

Formation is forming high among the youngsters who have recently formed the local squadron of the Sons of the American Legion. Applications for membership now run around 20, with more coming. Good times are in store for them this winter in their attractive clubroom.

So much interest has been expressed by those outside of the Legion in the latter's program to root out communism and to prevent war, that it was suggested at a recent meeting of local Legion officials to organize a Legion club for men who are not eligible for Legion membership but whose sympathies are with the Legion in its work and many of whom barely missed being eligible for the Legion by freak of circumstance or disability. The Legion has already taken care of the mothers and sisters of the Legionnaires in the Auxiliary organization and lately has provided for their sons. This has left father on the outside, looking in, and it is to meet his need and to provide an outlet for the goodwill, energy and sympathy of the Legion's civilian friends that the idea of a Legion club was conceived.

Such a club would have its own meeting night, but would use the Legion Home as its headquarters, with full privileges of its facilities for recreation and comfort. Those who would be interested in the formation of such an organization are cordially asked to express their sentiments to the local Legion officials so that the latter will have something to work on. Already several Charlevoix men have done so.

AUTO STICKERS GO ON SALE HERE ON MONDAY

Sticker sales, extending the use of 1935 automobile license plates until August 1, 1936, will commence on Monday, December 2nd, according to a recent announcement by the manager of the local branch of the Department of State.

Telegram from the State Department at Lansing, authorizing this notice, did not specify what the deadline for the unextended use of the 1935 license plates would be, but, presumably, it will be set for January 1, 1936, although this date is, as yet, unofficial. More detailed announcement will be made later when further information is available.

PROTEST TARIFF CUT ON SEED POTATOES

Growers' Exchange Contends Michigan Market Will Be Harmed

Plans for filing of a protest in Washington against the tariff reduction on certified seed under the recent Canadian reciprocal trade agreement were made today by the Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange of Cadillac.

According to Lloyd F. Dibble, general manager of the exchange, the reduction would open many Atlantic seaboard markets to Canadian seed. Growers throughout Maine and New York he said, with their markets curtailed by Canadian competition, would ship into Pennsylvania and other states which formerly used a large portion of the Michigan crop.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

Great Interest Being Manifested In New Project, "Helping Your Child Be His Best"

"Why our children behave as they do" is the object of the first lecture to be given by Mrs. Lydia Ann Lynde, specialist in child care and training. In order to make it more convenient for interested parents and older children to attend, two meetings will be held in the county. The first will be held in the Charlevoix High school assembly room Wednesday night, December 4, at 8 o'clock. The second to be held in the East Jordan High school auditorium on Thursday night, December 5. The meetings will be identical and the public is most cordially invited and urged to attend.

The project series will consist of five meetings, the first and last open to the general public, and the second, third and fourth only for leaders or delegates who will come to a central training center. These delegates will then give the instruction to a group of parents in their own community. It is hoped that P. T. A. groups, study clubs, church groups, rural schools and many others, will be glad to select delegates to receive these most instructive lessons from Mrs. Lynde.

If time does not permit the organization of groups before the first lesson on December 4 and 5. Kindly contact your county agent in Boyne City if your community would like to have a study group. Be sure to attend your nearest meeting next week.

If time does not permit the organization of groups before the first lesson, be sure to attend and hear the project discussed and hear the topics announced for the succeeding meetings. The complete organization of groups may take place after the first per cent of all connections made in the entire United States. Also that approximately 25 per cent of all farms in this state are now using electrical energy not only for lights but for heat and power. As soon as the survey blanks are turned back to the extension office in Boyne City, a big map of the county will be prepared. The project will then be written and a large amount of data accumulated pertaining to the different communities where lines may be extended. All this material will be submitted to the state committee and then to Washington.

It is hoped that volunteers will send their names to the office so that survey sheets will be sent to them to cover their community. Up to the present, no activity has taken place around the East Jordan area.—Will a few individuals assist the program by making a survey of their road or community? Blanks are available for this purpose and will be gladly sent out. It is hoped as a result of the efforts that more people in Charlevoix county may have the use of electricity.

School of Cooperation Held at Boyne City

The first meeting in the school of cooperation series was held last Friday in the Boyne City federal building. Cooperative managers and other representatives were in attendance from Otsego, Antrim and Charlevoix counties.

The program was started by a "report on the results of a field study of 70 Michigan co-ops," given by A. B. Love, of Michigan State College. This proved to be highly interesting and educational, as it clearly demonstrated how the average farmer cooperative company conducts its business.

In addition a splendid discussion took place relative to potatoes and the efforts of the federal government in controlling the sales of this commodity. C. L. Nash led this discussion and in conclusion gave a brief outline of how the Warren Act would operate for 1936.

Fred Hibbs, manager of the Cadillac Exchange, was chairman of the meeting and participated in the many discussions that took place. Another similar meeting will be conducted next month. This is the fourth winter that these meetings have been held and they are proving to be of immense value to managers of cooperative agencies in this area.

Rural Electrification Making Headway In County

If the attendance and interest shown at the three meetings held last week to discuss rural electrification is any indication, there is no doubt but that success will be the result of the activities started in many sections. H. J. Gallagher, representative of the Michigan State College, gave a very complete picture of the electrification program as it is being carried on in Michigan.

He made the statement that in the year of 1934, Michigan furnished 16

AT THE MOVIES

Thrilling Drama of Newspapers at Palace

"The Payoff," First National hit on newspaper drama, comes to the Palace Theatre November 27-28, with a tri-star cast, including James Dunn, Claire Dodd and Patricia Ellis.

The picture is entirely different from its predecessors in the newspaper field, centering about the activities of an honest sports writer, his contact with the gambling fraternity, and his love affairs, which, incidentally, furnish a new twist to the triangular romance.

"Alibi Boy," starring Joe E. Brown, will be shown Saturday and Sunday, November 30 and December 1.

"What on earth are you up to?"

"I do the stenciling—oh, and both wants, too, and then I get into the cage at the box."

"And you're cleaning the stove too."

"Sit down, Peters, and rest. Here, do the peas. I'll get out of all this!" Antoinette ignored the confusion her own swift activity and concentration, and was wrestling with the hot oven dish towards when her aunt came in.

Little Miss Bruce was cramped with the cold; her gloves and boots and shoulders were damp; she fairly shuddered with pleasure as she came into the comfortable warm kitchen.

"You got caught in it, Aunt Meggy?"

"Caught in it, I should say I did!" scolded Miss Bruce, with a pretty little petulant manner that had remained with her since long-ago days of popularity and youth and prettiness. "I do believe we could have a fire in the sitting room tonight. Oh, later, later. There's Jingle—Jingle, you bad cat, where were you all morning?"

"Bad cat is right!" said Antoinette. "He was out on the roof again, and he leaped in your window and knocked your violets over. And I wish you could see your quilt!"

Miss Bruce, small, gray, fuzzy headed in her mackintosh and tied small hat, stood rooted with horror in the spot, both small clawlike hands at her breast.

"He didn't! I left—also today! I left that window open at the bottom; I'm always forgetting that!" lamented the older woman. "Yes, rub yourself against my legs now," she reproached the cat. "You will, won't. Here you might as well come along with me if you've done all the mischief you could do for once," she added, trailing from the room with the cat coiling affectionately against her. "Fluffy home tonight, darling?"

"Nope. Gone to Sacramento."

"That looks as if Barney Kerr was half as important as Cliff," Miss Bruce said triumphantly, scornfully.

"Maybe they need Barney here," Antoinette, who for reasons of her own did not quite like to have Barney so precisely, knew for the aggrandizement of Cliff, offered mildly.

"Fiddlesticks!"

"He went to the water polo."

"I don't think after his pneumonia that he ought to play water polo."

"Fiddlesticks!"

"He went to the water polo."

"I don't think after his pneumonia that he ought to play water polo."

...Antoinette spoke jestingly:

"I wonder if queens—or let's say movie queens, there are so few of the other sort left—I wonder if movie queens ever do anything as pleasant as to come out to a nice warm kitchen and have the sort of dinner they like to cook!"

This affected Miss Bruce emotionally. Her back was to the kitchen, as she filled the kettle at the sink, but her voice was thick with sudden tears.

"I declare, Tony, you have a wonderful nature," she said.

"Hasn't she?" Brenda asked.

"You flatter and charm me, ladies," said Tony, kneeling at the oven door and turning to look over her shoulder. "What have I done that merits this—this unsolicited testimonial? I have pretended wants," said Tony, "and then I have moments of frenzy!"

Tony said that she would set the table and drifted into the sitting room.

A long, lean, tousle-headed boy was stretched upon the sitting-room couch now; his heavy lesson book slid to the ground as he turned to face Tony.

"Boo," she said. "I didn't hear you come in. How was the meet?"

"Five and five; we tied 'em in the last three seconds," the boy said, with a stretch and a yawn. "Dinner nearly ready?"

CHAPTER II

Presently they were at dinner. Tony, smiling at them all, said suddenly: "Isn't anyone going to ask me about the job on the Journal?"

"I knew the minute I saw you that there was nothing doin'," Brenda said.

"Nope," Tony said heroically, "nothing doing!"

"Ah, my dear, I'm so sorry!"

"That means," Tony said, staring into space, playing with her knife, "that I've been to every city editor and every Sunday editor in this city. I've been to the Catholic weekly and the Christian Science weekly and the Argonaut and the News Letter and Sunset. And I am not destined to enjoy a newspaper career!"

"Aw, gee! Break you up!" asked Bruce's hoarse young voice, all sympathy.

"Kind of," Tony blinked and laughed. "What'd he say, the Journal man, Tony?"

"Oh, he was nice enough. But he wasn't interested."

"Stuffy old miser!" Brenda said, helping herself to more strawberries.

"Oh, no, he's not, Bendy. He's a stunning young thing, as tall as Cliff—not much more than thirty. I should think, and very much the gent!"

"What did he say?"

"He wanted me to get advertisements, of course. I wonder," Tony said tonsingly, her elbow on the table, her square chin in one hand, "I wonder if it's horribly hard to get advertisements. Someone must do it; there are millions of them on all sides. Maybe I ought to try it. It might get me in, anyway."

"It doesn't seem to me the thing for a girl to do," Miss Bruce said with a decision that sat oddly upon her smallness and frailness.

"I'll get something," Tony said again; "but it seems so useless to get started in anything I really don't want to do."

"Hello, everyone. Cliff here!"

"He's really shy—Barney; he's been standing there hating to make the break," Tony thought, as she called back cordially, "Come in, Barney. No, he's not. He went to Sacramento."

Barney's big bulk slid into the chair that Aunt Meggy, fluttering departing, left empty.

"I can't stay," Barney said half-heartedly.

"You didn't come to dinner, Barney," Brenda observed.

"No—I—I couldn't very well." He was floundering. Tony's grin had a slightly malicious tinge in the dark. There was a silence.

"We can have a light if there's any purpose in it," Tony observed.

"No, I have to go," Barney said, not stirring. "I wonder why we're all so tired tonight?" he asked, after a space.

"Oh, we sold the Izaak Walton," Brenda remembered to announce suddenly. "To Mr. Talbot bought it."

"I wouldn't thank you for all the first editions that ever were!" Tony remarked. This observation was permitted to die away into silence. Then Barney asked:

"What took Cliff to Sac'?"

"Who said so?" Barney's words were like bullets.

"Cliff did."

"When'd he say?"

"Well, I can just know Ba-ney this morning and M. Bailey [illegible] comes here so [illegible] was [illegible] like a [illegible] I knew he had [illegible] for Sac'ramento."

"[illegible] Barney's [illegible] the [illegible]

"[illegible] Tony [illegible] secret [illegible] Tony [illegible] she had [illegible] by her words [illegible]

"Oh, I see."

"Was it true it Cliff's fault?"

"It was all our faults I guess. We [illegible]

"I suppose," Tony volunteered, "they wanted this couple-inch [illegible] up vertically, as it were, and it was cut to be down sidewise, and they said they'd have to take out a piece of wall to the basement."

"Who said so?" Barney asked, by the explosive [illegible] had used before.

"Well, that was it. That was the reason."

Except for repeating, after his breath, Cliff's own explosive, Barney made no comment on this. There was silence again. "See Bellamy on the Journal, Tony?" he asked.

"Yes, I did. This morning. Nothing came of it."

"Ha!" Barney ejaculated, and at his tone she felt her cheeks flush in the shadows. It was as if Barney felt himself personally charged with the business of getting Tony Taft, who had lost so many jobs in the past few years, still another.

"What was it that your Aunt Sally had in mind?"

"She wasn't at home when I telephoned, so I don't know," Tony said untruthfully. It was none of his business whether she was working or idle.

"Miss Grace in our office is going to marry Jay Kibbler," Barney said after a moment. "She's not such a smart girl, but we all feel badly to have her go. For one thing she's always on time." The voice that he had been trying to keep very casual over his pipe took on a slightly sententious note. "I think that's darned important," he went on. "Being on time, dependable. And then she's a smartly dressed girl, neat. Men like women in offices to be neat, look nice. Then another thing, you never hear her. Quiet. All the girls like her, but there's none of this giggling and whispering—"

"I loathe you, you smug pig," Tony said pleasantly in her heart, as he paused. "Who are you to rule it into me that I don't get to the office on time, and that my clothes are shabby? I loathe and despise you, smoking there and feeling so sure of yourself, and if you had forty thousand a week I wouldn't marry you under chloroform!"

Aloud she said nothing, and the rain began to spatter and whisper in the dark again. Barney said for the third time, "Gosh, I've got to go," and this time did go, with a little doorway murmuring to Brenda, and a casual "Night, Tony," to the younger girl.

Car Owners Trip On New U. S. Rule

Many automobile owners and drivers of the state are finding out that the United States Post Office Department is charging an additional fee to cash the money orders sent to Lansing for automobile license plates or operators' licenses, if the orders are drawn on any post office but Lansing's.

Under a federal postal regulation enacted by Congress June 16, 1934, a graduated system of fees for cashing money orders other than offices of payment, was set up. The fee virtually double the cost of such money orders. The state must charge this fee back to the applicant for license plates or driver's license, denying the application until the added federal fee is sent. This involves letter writing, more postage, and, in some cases, injured feeling.

The regulation has become particularly noticeable in recent weeks because of two factors; the public agitation for traffic safety, which has impelled thousands to renew their operators' licenses, and improved business, which has spurred the sale of automobile license plates. Many scores of car owners and drivers have sought to save time by sending their applications direct to Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, with approval of local examining officers necessary, of course, in the case of operators' license applications. The obstacle is encountered, however, if the enclosed money order is made out, as many of them are, to the Secretary of State, payable in the home city of the applicant. This is especially true in cities having branch offices of the State Department.

The fee for a $1 order thus carelessly drawn is 45 cents; the state has to spend three cent postage to collect it. The average automobile license plate costs $9.75; the fee in this instance is eleven cents. The state has no recourse, it having no fund from which these fees can be paid legally. Money orders for the Secretary of State should be made payable at Lansing only.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (1 Cor. 3:18, 19): "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 393): "Mind is the master of the corporeal senses, and can conquer sickness, sin, and death. PROPOSE NEW LAWS IN TRAFFIC DRIVE

FOUR RECOMMENDATIONS TO GO TO LEGISLATURE

Tighten Examination for Drivers' License, More Rigid Inspection of Motor Cars, Proposed

Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald announced today that four recommendations looking to better control of traffic would be submitted to the Legislature at its next session.

Proposed amendments to the present motor laws are:

1. That a certain amount of money received by local governments from the state for the examination of applicants for drivers' licenses, be earmarked for the establishment of adequate facilities for examination of these applicants, thus overcoming the present routine approval which permits many persons to drive cars who are not physically qualified.

2. That police make annual examinations of the safety equipment and general condition of every motor vehicle registered within its jurisdiction, the cost to be paid by the owner if the car does not pass police inspection. The fee will be refunded in case the car is found in good shape.

3. That police and other peace officers delegated to this work be agents of the Department of State or of the Michigan State Police and thus be subject to state control in the exercise of their duties.

4. That the "uniform code" drafted by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety be adopted entirely by Michigan to centralize enforcement and regulation.

"If drivers don't drive right after the State Safety Council's campaign of education has reached out over the states," he said, "it will be because they don't care to or because they lack the mental or physical capacity to handle a motor car with due regard to the rights of other people, be they motorists or pedestrians."

Addressing a safety mass meeting in crowded Pqudden auditorium, Lansing, the Governor asked "sound, forceful backing-up" of the state's campaign by the various communities.

"What good does it do to educate a person whose mind will not absorb education?" he asked.

"What good does it do to try to educate a person who is physically unable to do what to mind tells him should be done?

"A person who can't understand the meaning of a plainly uttered warning, or one whose weak eyes make it impossible for him to follow a simple rule of safety, is not going to benefit from this first, or educational, phase of our campaign.

"What we need, and must have, to round out our effort, is a protective measure that will not permit such persons to drive an automobile. It sounds nice to generalize and to say that our highways are the property of all the people. But we know that the use of our highways should not be available to those who can not use them without endangering the lives of others."

The situation is not improved, said the Governor, by the activity of an element "which seems desirous of making it easier for a driver to take around a few extra drinks at a late hour, or on Sundays.

"The drinking driver is a problem. If it is legally established that he is drunk, he can be properly disposed of. He can be punished and his license revoked, but the legal hair-line between sobriety and intoxication is something which only lawyers and judges can argue about with any definite result—and they frequently differ in their opinions.

"The driver who is not legally drunk, but who nevertheless is under the influence of liquor, may remain in good standing, according to law, but you and I know that he is not as good a driver, not as careful as he would be if he hadn't taken that first drink. It is a situation that I do not think can be reached by law. All we can do is to appeal to the reason of those who drive after drinking.

"Recently a driver became involved in an accident which injured another person. The constable and the doctor who attended the injured person, and other witnesses, testified that the driver was drunk. The driver, alone, I believe, was the only one who denied he was drunk. He merely admitted he was 'sleepy.'

"The legal and the judicial ramifications of this case I do not profess to understand. I am not a lawyer. I DO know that the assistant prosecutor permitted the charge to be changed from drunk driving to reckless driving, and the justice of the peace accepted a plea of guilty and fined the man $25. That was all there was to it, except that counsel for the person injured wrote to the Governor and wondered what kind of a state he was living in.

"The Governor did what he could. He had an investigation made. The assistant prosecutor said he thought that the justice of the peace was going to dismiss the drunk driving charge, so he used his discretion and obtained a plea of guilty on the lesser charge. The justice of the peace said he acted with the consent or approval of the assistant prosecutor.

"There you have it. The record is clear. These officials acted within their lawful rights. They used their own discretion. The Governor is powerless to do anything about it.

"But the people are not powerless. It is their responsibility to place in office the type of men who use their discretionary power to a different end. When all is said and done, this movement to save human lives depends almost entirely upon the public. Safety councils, manufacturers, motorists' organizations and others can not carry the load alone. Their efforts will be only partly successful unless the great majority of automobile drivers make it their own particular job not only to drive safely themselves but to assist their public officials in removing the dangerous driver from the roads of Michigan."

No. 3—MIST AND FOG

So long as there is light we may skip around at a lively rate over this old globe of ours. We may span oceans in surprising time. We may cross the continent from sun-up to sun-down.

But every now and then Mother Nature decides to put us in our place, and of all her devices to make us slow down, none is more effective than mist and fog.

Now we may not have to contend with fog and mist very frequently, but we're bound to now and then, and when we do, it can cause us a lot of annoyance and trouble.

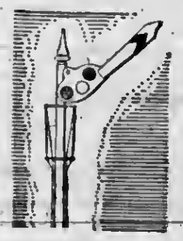
When a good heavy fog comes—on land, at sea or in the air—everything that moves, moves with caution. The ocean liner slows down several knots an hour. Lightships signal, buoys sound and foghorns boom. Airlines ground their planes and cancel trips. Even trains on tracks reduce their speed—and we drivers on the highways, too, must make our way cautiously through that baffling screen. For one thing is true. In spite of all our progress, transportation still depends on pairs of eyes in human heads.

Scientists who have studied fog, say that it is composed of tiny drops of water. These drops are so small and light that they hang in the air, and so close together that light can hardly get through them. Instead, these little drops act like tiny convex mirrors. When we try to pierce them with a beam of light, a great deal of it is thrown right back at us, so the effect is just like a great, gleaming white curtain in front of us.

Experienced drivers say that the first thing to do is to get our lights right. The main thing is to direct the beams downward. If we have them shining straight ahead, those little mist-drop mirrors reflect the rays back in our eyes. But if they're pointing downward, the rays are deflected toward the road.

Then they say it's a good idea to guide by the road edge at our right, and if we have a spotlight on our car, to focus it right on that road edge, close to the front of the car, so the edge will be clearly lighted. But we have to keep a good weather eye ahead, too, because fog veils more than the road. It hides not only things on the road but such things as roadside warnings of curves and hills and intersections. Even the traffic light's red and green signal rays have the same hard time that our headlights do getting through that strange haze. In fact, in a good heavy fog, the best we can do for our vision is none too good. And so the main thing is to slow down. The ships have to do it, the trains have to do it, and we have to do it too. If we won't make up our minds to that, they tell us the best thing we can do is to pull off the road, or if we have not yet started out, we had better just stay home.

But seeing in fog and mist is only half the story. We not only have to see, but we also have to be seen. Our headlights properly adjusted are strong enough to do their duty in pointing us out to people coming from the opposite direction. And, in addition, some drivers use their horns like foghorns by giving them a toot every now and then. But another thing we have to think of is to be sure drivers behind us see us. That's why it's so important to have our stop-signal and tail-light working when we're driving in fog. And so it's a good thing to make sure that these lights are working and to wipe off those little red glasses if they happen to be covered with mud. If the weather's clear and our tail-light has gone out, the other fellow's lights may point us out fairly well. But if his headlights are fighting fog, they can't do much to protect us.



So, when all is said and done, driving in fog is just a matter of having our headlights and tail-lights right and being a little more careful. If we do that, we can drive our cars safely, even through Nature's stubborn obstacles of mist and fog.

PLAIN PAPER MAKES ROOM MORE PLEASANT

Bright Colors, Realistic Designs Draw Attention From Other Furnishings

Wallpaper, which is supposed to be a background, for the furnishings in a room, sometimes is so conspicuous that it is impossible to arrange furniture so that it shows to best advantage, according to home furnishing specialists at Michigan State College.

Wallpaper with realistic patterns of flowers, knots of ribbons, or of vines should be avoided. The more natural the pattern, the more difficult to arrange the room so it will be a pleasant place to rest or work. Extremely dark colors make a room gloomy.

Paper with inconspicuous stripes can be used. Stripes which run vertically rather than across the room or diagonally will be more pleasing. The stripes make a low room appear to have higher walls. Plain or nearly plain paper with grayed colors are usually the most suitable. Such wall coverings make splendid backgrounds for the furnishings.

In hall or corridors, where there are few pieces of furniture, it is possible to use papers with gayer designs than in rooms where more furnishings are used. The colors of the paper should be duller than those of the furnishings, even in hallways.

Borders for the paper are not needed in most rooms. If the ceilings are high, the ceiling paper may be brought down on the side walls, and a picture molding placed where the papers meet. When borders are used, the design and colors should not attract attention from other things in the room.

4-H CLUBS WILL ENTER CONSERVATION PROGRAM

State-Wide Participation of Clubs Is Assured by Leaders

Conservation will become an integral part of the 4-H Club program in Michigan this winter.

As a result of a meeting of 4-H Club leaders held in East Lansing early this month, it is expected that hundreds of 4-H Clubs, representing every section of the state, will soon start planning conservation projects to be conducted during the winter months.

A committee consisting of club leaders and representatives of the Department of Conservation is now preparing a list of suggested projects. Among the projects being considered are establishment of winter bird-feeding stations, game surveys, bird propagation, forest-fire prevention work, farm-game management, assisting in collecting deer tally, bird-tally and creel-census cards, etc.

Members of 4-H Clubs are almost exclusively from rural areas of the state and, it is believed, can become of great influence in progressive conservation work. All field men of the Department of Conservation are being urged to assist the young men and women in every possible way.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN IS SEEKING AIR MAIL

Traverse City Leads Move to Bring Service to This Region

Realizing the importance of air mail service to Northern Michigan, particularly during the resort season, the local Chamber of Commerce is taking steps toward securing such service and will enlist in the cause various civic groups from Cadillac north to Mackinaw City and possibly Sault Ste. Marie.

One of the larger air lines has already been approached with a suggestion that it survey this territory for a line connecting with trunk lines at Grand Rapids or Detroit and it is probable that a representative will come to Traverse City and Western Michigan in a short time to conduct this survey.

One of the first steps will be a petition to the Post Office Department requesting air mail service. Such a petition, it is hoped, will start agitation for an air line from the federal end. State aeronautic officials have also been contacted and have assured the Chamber of Commerce they will give all assistance possible to the project.

It is possible that a meeting of representatives of cities which might be served by such an air line will be called to discuss ways and means of securing it and lay out a concerted plan toward that end.

KIPMEN LOSE PAIR BASKETBALL GAMES

PELLSTON BEAT VARSITY BY 17 TO 15 COUNT

Novak's Ellsworth Cagers Defeated Local Reserves 30 to 14—Kipmen Go to Traverse City Friday

Charlevoix cagers lost both games in the double bill opening the 1935-36 season at the local gymnasium last Friday night.

Max Novak's Ellsworth quintet took the measure of Charlevoix's reserves in the opening game by a decisive 30 to 14 count. The visitors, strong in every position, appear to be heading places in Northern Michigan Class D competition. It was a sweet combination. Charlevoix used 16 players during the contest but never found a combination as good as the visitors'.

Drouth and E. Edson with eight each and Shooks with six points, led the Ellsworth offense. Richardson was high point man for Charlevoix with five.

Pellston Tems Varsity

The main contest of the evening between Charlevoix's varsity and Pellston's Class D outfit went to the visitors by a 17 to 15 score. The Pellston team, made up largely of players who last year copped the Northern Michigan district and regional titles, staged a third period scoring spree to win. They trailed 5 and 3 at the quarter and 11 to 5 at the half. They counted nine points in the third stanza while holding Charlevoix scoreless for a 14 to 11 advantage, and coasted through to victory with three points to Charlevoix's four in the last quarter.

McRae with six and Syrell with five were high for the visitors. Keith Carey accounted for eight of Charlevoix's 15 points.

The Kipmen's performance Friday was far from championship rubber. Playing without the services of Schwab, a last year's veteran absent due to illness, the team appeared slow and gave a decided ragged showing.

Charlevoix plays the first of three games on foreign courts Friday night when they go to Traverse City for the annual clash with the Class B Trojans. Their next games in order take them to Petoskey and Grayling.

MICHIGAN HAS 9,000 MILES OF TRUNKLINE

State's Highway System Has Greatly Increased In Thirty Years

Michigan's trunkline highway system has multiplied more than 9,000 times in the last thirty years.

The latest compilation of trunkline mileage, announced today by State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner, reveals there were 9,458,212 miles of highway in the state as of November 1st. The first trunkline of road ever built in Michigan was one mile of nine-foot gravel at Cass City in 1905.

Four years after the construction of the first trunkline road came the first concrete pavement in Michigan. In 1909 the State Highway Department built one mile of 18-foot pavement on Woodward avenue in the city of Detroit between the Six and Seven Mile roads.

Today there are twenty-four various type of roads in the trunkline system. The total mileage now embraces 3,999,137 miles of concrete pavement. Only 350,306 miles of roads are classified as impassable.

DEER HUNTERS ARE ASKED TO FILL AND MAIL IN TALLY CARD

Deer hunters of Michigan again are being asked by the Department of Conservation to cooperate in obtaining information on deer hunting result.

By filling out the accompanying deer tally form, the hunter can assist the department in its annual compilation of data on the kill. The deer tally form offers the individual sportsman an opportunity to report his observations in the field and to make comments and suggestions relative to hunting conditions. If he so wishes, he may forward supplemental information to accompany the filled out tally form.

The information sought in tally cards, thousands of which are distributed each year, is of help to the department in its work of servicing the deer herd and the hunter. The printed tally form will be found elsewhere in this week's Courier.

Deceased was born May 26, 1861, in Hohemin. He came to this country 35 years ago, coming directly to this city, where he had since made his home. In earlier years he was an employe of the Charlevoix Lumber Co.

Surviving besides the widow are four children: Arthur, Frank and Mrs. Louis Louzelle, of this city, and Mrs. Mary Taylor, of Petoskey; also a brother, Rudolph, of Detroit, and sister, Mrs. R. R. Farmer, of Norwood township.

Funeral services were conducted at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon from the home, Rev. G. R. Parker, of the Congregational church, officiating.

STATE PREPARES TO CARRY RELIEF

FINAL FEDERAL ALLOTMENT FOR DECEMBER

Look to Counties As Problem Can Be Handled Only If Local Communities Do Their Share

The State Relief Administration is busy today drawing up a budget for next year after receipt of word that Michigan's final federal grant will be $1,250,000 for December.

William Haber, state relief administrator, said after receiving notification of the federal allotment from Harry L. Hopkins, federal administrator, that no difficulty is anticipated in meeting the needs for December.

"It will be up to the local communities to contribute after January 1," Haber warned. "If they provide their share, we can avoid a serious relief situation next year. Otherwise, counties may be forced to support their own relief cases."

About $750,000 of the state relief appropriation will be used to supplement the federal grant for next month, Haber explained. Beginning the first of the year, about $900,000 monthly will be taken from the $9,000,000 set aside by the last Legislature. No other funds, except those provided by local government units will be available next year, he said.

Hopkins has also authorized Haber to transfer any unexpended balances in previous federal grants to the general state relief fund, but the Michigan administrator explained that this amount was negligible.

"The December grant," Haber said, "is definitely labeled 'final.' It will enable us to meet relief needs next month without drawing on our allowance from state funds for more than the proportionate monthly amount, but the state appropriation will not be sufficient to cover the relief cost after December."

LESS NOTICE WILL BE GIVEN TAX LAND SALE

List of Descriptions Will Not Be Published This Year

The auditor general's department will keep within the $19,000 provided for advertising tax delinquent property next spring, Gus T. Hartman, deputy auditor general, has announced.

He said $425,000 to $450,000 has been required for this purpose in past years, but points to legislative action as cause for the reduction.

"At the last session the Legislature decreed individual properties no longer were to be advertised," Hartman said. "Hereafter only notifications of the sale will be carried and prospective purchasers will be obliged to visit the county clerk's office to obtain a description of the property."

He said $20,000 was provided by the last Legislature, but the blanket five per cent reduction in all appropriations reduced the amount to $19,000.

MASONS WILL ELECT, INSTALL NEW OFFICERS

KIWANIS BENEFIT EVENT THURSDAY

CHILDREN'S XMAS FUND ENTERTAINMENT AT GYM

Present Marquis, Popular Magician, to Raise Funds for the Annual Yuletide Charity Program

Needy Charlevoix children will be the beneficiaries of a Kiwanis sponsored entertainment scheduled to be held Thursday evening at the gymnasium for the benefit of the Kiwanis Children's Christmas Fund.

They are bringing to Charlevoix the popular magician, Marquis, whose introduction to the local public will occur Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock when the magician drives a car through Bridge street completely blindfolded.

For the evening entertainment, Marquis brings a massive and spectacular production. An elaborate array of imported jeweled scenery is carried and glittering beauty is added to it by special electrical effects. The great magician is aided by a staff of assistants who work in split second precision.

Two solid hours of mirth and mystery is presented by Marquis. Bathing beauties of amazing pulchritude appear from bath houses previously explored and found to be "overflowing with emptiness."

An Oriental maiden girl floats through the air upon the behest of Marquis who reproduces the miracle of the floating girl exactly as he saw it presented in a garden in Hyderbad. There are amazing transpositions of human beings. Real living, breathing girls vanish into the "Nowhere" right above your head. There is modern spookery and throughout it all fun galore.

Marquis presents a program which appeals to the whole family from Grand Dad to Lad. There are huge and bewildering illusions, interludes of delightful comedy and even an expose of the fake spirit medium. Thousands of live bunnies have been given away by Marquis to his juvenile admirers and several lucky girls and boys will have their cup of joy filled to overflowing when they are given a real live magic bunny by the great magician himself.

GERHART GETS TERM AT JACKSON PRISON

Pleaded Guilty to Felonious Assault, Given 9 Months to 4 Years

William Gerhart, proprietor of the Manitou Club, popular Little Traverse Bay resort, is in a cell in the Southern Michigan Prison at Jackson, serving a nine months to four years sentence for felonious assault.

In October Gerhart was found guilty of assault to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder by a jury in circuit court before Judge Parm C. Gilbert. He was sentenced to serve 18 months to 10 years but appealed.

Last Wednesday Gerhart pleaded guilty to felonious assault, a lesser charge, before Judge Gilbert and was given the shorter term. In addition, Gerhart must pay court costs of $500 within six months or serve an additional nine-months.

The case arose after a shooting near the Charlevoix County Nurseries about a year ago.

WPA PAYROLLS ARE DISTRIBUTED HERE

WORKERS RECEIVE PAY TWICE MONTH HEREAFTER

Five Projects Opened November 12 In Charlevoix Are Progressing Satisfactorily

The dole has ended for approximately 1,500 former welfare clients in Charlevoix, Antrim and Otsego counties.

Two payrolls have been distributed, one Saturday for workers from relief rolls, and another Wednesday for non-relief workers, marking the first pay checks from federal funds since the WPA program was instituted November 12. Due to the fact work was started near the close of the pay period in this district, the initial payrolls were small, representing only a small part of the next full-time payroll expected to run well into five figures for the district.

According to D. T. McHugh, director, workers will receive pay checks twice each month. Payrolls go in at the close of work periods ending on the fifth and 20th of each month. Checks will be received within nine days or sooner after these dates. To insure payment of the first checks at the allotted time, messengers were utilized to bring payrolls from the field, take them to Cheboygan for checking, to Lansing, and back to Cheboygan for final distribution.

Five projects are now progressing rapidly in Charlevoix. Right-of-way on the scenic drive in Charlevoix township has been cleared, approximately a mile south of Bell's Bay and a tractor and grader is grading the highway. The municipal dock project will soon be resumed now that material needed is on the ground. The landscaping program is now continued largely to the new park project between Clinton and Mason streets. Work on the south side recreational field is moving along nicely.

MORE DEER HUNTERS CROSS STRAITS IN '35

Nearly 40,000 Reported by Michigan Highway Department

Nearly 40,000 deer hunters crossed the Straits of Mackinac during the recent hunting season, State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner reported today.

Traffic over the Straits ferries during the 20-day period from November 16 through November 30 included 15,549 automobiles and 23,929 paid passengers. No additional charge is made for a driver.

A thousand more automobiles made the trip than last year but each automobile carried fewer passengers on the average. A comparison with last year's record shows that 14,349 automobiles were carried across the Straits in 1934 and 23,915 paid passengers.

STOEL-SMITH WEDDING SOLEMNIZED THURSDAY

Miss Dorothy Smith Became Bride of Albert Stoel, of Ellsworth

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Smith, of Barnard, on Thanksgiving Day, when their daughter, Miss Dorothy Smith, was united in marriage to Arthur Stoel, of Ellsworth.

The bride was attended by Miss Ruth Mutchett, of Lansing, while Carleton Smith, of Barnard, filled the role of best man. Miss Smith was gowned in a blue silk dress, while Miss Mutchett wore a purple velvet frock. Mrs. Clyde Smith, mother of the bride, played the wedding march by Mendelssohn, while Miss Mary Smith and Clayton Smith sang a pretty duet.

The Rev. Isaac Scherpenisse, Th.M., united this happy couple in the bonds of holy matrimony.

Following a very delightful and bounteous wedding repast, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stoel departed on their honeymoon.

ALL EMPLOYABLES ABSORBED BY WPA

ABLE-BODIED TRANSFERRED FROM WELFARE ROLLS

District No. 1, Including Charlevoix County, Has 3,105 Men Working On WPA Projects

All able-bodied heads of families formerly on welfare rolls have been transformed into workers and family providers by the Works Progress Administration in Michigan.

Administrator Harry L. Pierson announced more than 90,000 men and women are at work this week on more than 1,000 projects covering the state.

This figure is approximately 10,000 under the employables assigned to WPA when the program got under way late in August. The 10,000 were found to have returned to private industry in the interval.

In providing work for this number by December 1, the WPA met the deadline set by the federal government for ending "the dole" in Michigan.

WPA payrolls are now running nearly $1,000,000 a week. All WPA workers have been kept on relief rolls until they receive their first pay checks.

Latest available employment figures by districts, issued last weekend when 80,000 were at work, showed WPA jobs distributed over the state as follows:

District	Headquarters	Workers
1	Cheboygan	3,150
2	Clare	2,500
3	Flint	9,350
4	Detroit	19,500
5	Lansing	9,100
6	Iron Mountain	13,000
7	Grand Rapids	14,100
8	Kalamazoo	9,500
	Total	80,200

Of the last 10,000 assigned this week, 8,000 were in Detroit and Wayne county, less than 3,000 in the rest of the state.

Dr. William Haber, chairman of the Michigan Emergency Relief Commission, said between 50,000 and 55,000 families without employable members remained on relief rolls throughout Michigan, representing the permanent welfare load.

REPORT DEER KILL SHORT THIS SEASON

BIGGEST ARMY HUNTERS BAG FEWER BUCKS

Drummond Island Best In State, Producing One Buck to Every Three Hunters—Rap CCC Roads

Michigan's 1935 deer season came to an end officially Saturday night but it closed for many of the hunters a week or ten days ago.

The exodus from the deer country camps, especially north of the Straits, began as usual before the season was more than two or three days old. Something like half of the hunters were out of the woods in a week, and Thanksgiving Day saw the hunting country virtually deserted save for a handful of stragglers from outside and those resident hunters who had not yet filled their licenses.

The season was one of the poorest in recent years so far as the kill of legal bucks was concerned, especially in the Upper Peninsula. Hunters who stayed south of the Straits apparently fared a little better.

The first 9,000 hunters' cars, in round numbers, to return across the Straits carried home about 3,400 bucks. This is an average of a little better than a deer to every two cars.

Conservation officers checking at St. Ignace estimated that each car carried an average of more than three hunters which reduces the kill to something like one deer for each six hunters.

In past years the kill has been estimated to run one buck for more than three hunters, which reduces a far as the Upper Peninsula was concerned.

Whether the kill of deer was lighter this fall or whether the average dropped because of the greater number of hunters in the woods is hard to say. The hunting army that went north for the opening of the season is believed to have been the biggest in the history of the sport.

Drummond Island continues to be one of the state's best deer areas, on the basis of the conservation department's figures. Last week 805 hunters of the 1,200 to 1,300 who opened the season there had returned by ferry to Detour, bringing with them 297 bucks, an average of a deer to less than every three hunters.

This is better than double the average rating for the entire Upper Peninsula, according to all figures available.

The weather man this fall gave the hunters the best break they have had in several years.

The chief complaint heard among the returning deer hunters, on the ferries crossing the Straits, and at other concentration points, revolved around the miles of roads built by CCC camps in the remote sections of the deer woods.

Virtually every district of Michigan's hinterland has been penetrated by a network of these roads in the last two years.

From eastern deer country in the Lower Peninsula many complaints regarding the predominance of does over buck have been registered.

DECEMBER PTA MEETING NEXT WEDNESDAY

Harold Lamb, County Welfare Administratnr, Will Speak

The December meeting of Charlevoix Parent-Teacher Association has been announced for Wednesday evening, the 11th, at the high school.

Harold Lamb, administrator of the Charlevoix County Welfare, will be the principal speaker of the evening, speaking on the topic, "Welfare." Entertainment features are also being arranged by the entertainment committee.

COMMUNITY INTEREST BECOMES CENTERED ON CHRISTMAS

With Thanksgiving Day of 1935 marked off the calendar the community has already turned its attention toward Christmas and the holiday season.

Window displays of Christmas toys and other gifts, which are now being put in place, have all helped focus attention on the coming event.

The fact that only 16 more shopping days remain before the gifts go on the Christmas trees on Christmas Eve is also helping to stimulate holiday interest and impress on shoppers that their time is limited. Thanksgiving was later in November than usual this year, cutting down the shopping time between the two holidays.

It is said that no one but those who have been on the welfare can get work, and those who get employment cannot again go on the welfare. Single men and many married men have not been able to get work for the last three years. A number of married men went to Bellaire Saturday to get work, but were told if they had not been on the welfare they couldn't help them. In other words, if you are good enough to try to help yourself, the Democrats won't give your work, but if you lay around and won't work, they will give you work. Some system.

No. 4—OUR BRAKES

We've all noticed that whenever a train makes a long enough stop in a station, there's somebody on the job, dodging in and out under the cars making sure that everything is in good shape for the train to continue its trip. One of the things checked at every inspection point is the brakes. For nobody knows better than railroads how important it is to be able to stop when you have to stop.

Now, if we think of it in a certain light, we people who own automobiles are all running little transportation systems of our own . . . just like the railroads and airlines and bus companies. Home is the main terminal and there are lots of stops along the line . . . flag stops, you might say, and regular scheduled stops—like the office, the grocery store, the school, the theatre, and our friends' houses.

Just like the railroads, one of the main things we need to look out for is our brakes. Of course, everybody knows this and yet somehow or other we're apt to be a little careless about it. Not that brakes don't give us plenty of notice when they're going to need adjustment. As time goes on we find that we can push the pedal lower and lower, till after a while we can shove it down almost to the floorboards before the brakes take hold. Even then we sometimes wait quite a while before we have them adjusted. It just seems to be human nature to put off things like that. They tell us the result is that one-third of all cars on streets and highways at any given time have something wrong with their brakes.

The trouble is that when we let our brakes go like that, all of a sudden we may have to make an emergency stop, and we may find it rather embarrassing.

Engineers say that if we realized what goes on in brakes we would see why we ought to keep them checked up. As they explain, it's a story of momentum and friction, the same old forces we've talked about before.

They say that when we get going we build up a certain energy in the form of momentum. Now when we want to stop, we can't just destroy that energy, because, scientists tell us, Nature never lets any of its energy be destroyed. We can only convert it into some other form of energy. What brakes really do is to convert speed-energy into heat-energy. When we push down on the brake pedal we press the brake lining against the brake drums and this creates friction that changes the energy to heat. When we have changed all the speed energy to heat, then we come to a stop.

Now modern brakes are very powerful. In fact, a 100-horsepower car will have about 500-horsepower brakes. They can stop us pretty quickly even from high speeds. But when they do, they simply change those speeds into a great deal of heat, in a very short time. The fact is we sometimes build up temperatures in our brakes as high as 1400 degrees!

It's easy to see that heat like that can cause a lot of trouble. Some of us may think it's fun to rush up to sudden stops, but we might as well realize that we have to pay for that kind of fun in excessive brake wear. It simply doesn't pay to build up brake heat a lot faster than it can be thrown off. And we certainly get hardly anything back in time saved. For instance, if we're going 30 miles an hour, our brakes can stop us in 40 feet if they are all right; but it takes them less than two seconds longer to stop us in twice that distance. How much better it is, under any normal circumstances, to begin to apply the brakes a few seconds earlier and, with gradually increasing pressure, bring our car to an easy stop. As a matter of fact, smooth, gradual stopping wherever the circumstances permit, is generally taken as a sign of a good driver.

Now if we want to keep our brakes safe and sound, it's important to remember what these fast stops do to them. But it's just as important to remember that all stops generate some heat in our brakes. That's what gradually wears down the linings, and sooner or later makes a brake-adjustment necessary. And that's why we must watch for it and see that adjustments are made when they are needed.

So maybe it would be a good idea to keep on thinking of our cars as private transportation systems. If we keep them in good running condition, they will serve us with safety and satisfaction.

"No," Tony answered readily, yet in a tone so low that the other girl knew she was fighting steadily. "Not so much about that. But as I don't know, the whole thing; rather persons get into the work they like, and get paid for it, and make good. I seem to have to do everything I hate—bookkeeping jobs in stores, companion to crazy old ladies in love with their chauffeurs, teaching in private schools that go bust owing me a hundred and twenty dollars. It would seem that I can't do what I want to do, and I hate to do what I." She laughed, presently resuming on a less impatient note, "I hate to do what I have to do," she said mildly. "I hate office work, Bendy. If it were the stage, or a newspaper, or doing anything in the movies, I'd work like a dog. But just to go downtown tomorrow and get a job taking letters from young pup squeaks who haven't the remotest idea what they're talking about, and hang my coat in a locker, and go to a cafeteria for lunch, and go on with it, Brenda, for three years and five years and seven and twenty. It scares me!"

"You'll never drudge along in an office for seven years or for five!" Brenda predicted, in a troubled voice.

"You have?" Tony thought. Aloud she said nothing.

"You'll marry," Brenda said. Tony could feel her cheeks flush resentfully. "Maybe Barney—" Brenda went on boldly.

"I don't think it'll be Barney," Tony answered moderately. "I wish," she went on, her tone warming, "I wish you could have heard the nice little sermon he was just preaching to me! Barney's so outrageously—stuck—on himself!" Tony interpolated, resentfully: "about being on time at the office, and dressing smartly—"

"He must!"

"He did."

There was a silence.

"It only means that he's in love with you."

"He's in love with Barney Kerr—that's who he's in love with!"

"No, honestly, Tony, Barney isn't so conceited! But he likes you so much that he worries about you—honestly, that's it."

"Any man can ask any girl," Tony observed after thought. "He's never said anything."

"He's really in love with the whole family, and I don't blame him. When you look at the family he's got!" Tony said. "He's lonely; and he likes our food, and he can talk about oil circuit breakers and pole-top whatnots with Jeff,—and that's all there is to it."

"Tony," Brenda began, as Tony fell silent, "would you like him to ask you to marry him?"

"Yes." Tony answered without hesitation. "—but I could refuse him!"

Brenda laughed.

"He's too smart to risk that," she said. "In some ways he's much wiser than I am. But anyone seeing the way he watches you, Tony, and worries about your affairs, and—well, even in this giving advice this evening—anyone can see that he's thinking of you all the time. And I know this," Brenda went on seriously, "I know enough of human nature to know that the minute a man like that marries a woman, she—she becomes sacred. You'd be completely spoiled—everything you did would be wonderful—would be perfect to Barney! And if you ever had a child," said Brenda, "well, I can imagine the St. Joseph airs that Barney would put on! Nobody could stand him!"

Tony laughed, not displeased with the turn the conversation had taken. She knew that it was true. Barney did take himself and his profession seriously, but he took his relationship to Tony seriously, too.

"I could marry Barney," she said thoughtfully, reluctantly.

"But it would just be a marriage, Brenda," she burst out, after a pause. "It would just be—oh, a little apartment somewhere, and being nice to Mrs. Kerr, and agreeing with her that there never was a son like Barney; they can't be seven minutes together without quarreling, but that's neither

TOOK OFF 17 LBS. OF UGLY FAT

HEEDED DOCTOR'S ADVICE

Mrs. Robert Hickey, Rossville, Calif. writes: "My doctor prescribed Kruschen Salts for me—he said they wouldn't hurt me in the least. I've lost 17 lbs. in 6 weeks. Kruschen is worth its weight in gold."

Mrs. Hickey paid no attention to gossipers who said there was no safe way to reduce. She wisely followed her doctor's advice. Why don't YOU?

Get a jar of Kruschen to-day (lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle). Simply take half teaspoonful in cup of hot water every morning. All druggists.

"But why should you want me to get married, Bendy?"

"I want you to be happy."

"I wouldn't be. And once you're married, you can't be out."

"I daresay it's quite different, though, once you're in."

Tony was silent.

"But, why not Barney?" The older sister persisted gently. "Cliff loves him; we all do. We've known him all our lives."

"In the first place, he isn't in love with me," Tony said. "In the second I'm not in the least in love with him and I never could be. And at that," she added honestly, "I think he wants me, has it in his mind anyway, that we will marry some day, and I believe I could marry him and make him a dearned good wife! But there's no use doing that, Brenda," Tony finished, in a low tone. "There's no glory. If I were successful at something—as a head nurse or a reporter or a photographer or a lecturer, it'd be different. I'd marry with style, then. I'd feel that I'd been a success at something and would be at another. But if I married Barney now it'd be a burden—and he'd know it! It'd be just—just taking care of poor wild Tony,—who tried for the stage and the newspapers and was tired and stumbled all round and who finally realized that a woman's truest role is that of a wife and mother—" She stopped, her voice thickening.

"It is the happiest life," Brenda offered, in a slow voice with notes of pain in it. "If you love a man, that is," she added.

"Ah, but you see I don't," Tony said. "I know the real thing when I meet it. In that newspaper office today—down at the Journal rooms, I mean, I met a man—"

She stopped. Presently she resumed again, a little shamefacedly:

"You'd think I'm an absolute fool if I say that something — something flashed between us—between this Mr. Bellamy upon whom I'd never set eyes in my life before, and me—that was nearer—nearer—love, than anything Barney's ever made me feel! He had only to look at me to make me feel silly and cold and shuddery, you know that wonderful feeling that you're going all to pieces and don't care!"

"I don't know," said Brenda, laughing in sudden relief, "and I do think you're silly, idiotic. If you ask me. What do you know of this man?"

"Nothing!" admitted Tony, laughing too. "Except that he's somewhere around thirty, and married—"

"Married?"

"Yes, of course—he would be."

"But that isn't love, Tony."

"Well, maybe it isn't. But it's something, something a girl wants to have before she gives in, Brenda. Just the shape of his mouth—it's quite hard and firm, and the look in his eye—he looks up and smiles at you quite a while after he's finished speaking—"

"Adolphette Taft!"

"I know. I know how it sounds. I don't think it's supremely silly! I only—it does an illustration—What on—" She said the last words on a high note of fright. For the telephone was softly ringing.

She ran out in the narrow hall. Brenda's face was a study in varied emotions as she listened to the conversation that was by turns puzzled, awed, startled raptures.

"Oh, Bendy, Bendy," gasped Tony, rushing back to fall at her sister's knees and clutch at her dramatically. "It's the Call! Some Mr. Greenwood or other! Bendy, he wanted to see me tonight—I'm to see him at two tomorrow! He wanted me to come down right now. Twenty-five a week—twenty-five a week, and I'm to try the society column! Oh, Bendy, you'll help me, won't you? I mean with the people who come into the store—I mean getting engagements and parties and everything! Oh, Bendy, he sounded so nice! He said he was one of his senses trying to get someone, and I said I couldn't come down tonight—"

Cliff, blown and pale and tired, was in the hall doorway. "What's all the shooting about?" he said.

"Oh, Cliff, just as I was despairing—I'd been to the Journal today, and there didn't seem a chance—just as I was despairing, this Mr. Greenwood telephoned from the Taft, and he wants me to gather up all the news I can and begin tomorrow—and twenty-five a week, Cliff!"

"And, Cliff, you know I can do it," chattered Tony. "You know I can, Bendy! Aunt Sally'll help me, and Mrs. Terry!"

"Want to go down now and clinch it?" Clifford asked.

"Oh, Cliff, could we? He really did want to see me, because tomorrow's the day he usually has off, and he said I'd have to 'scout around and dig up a lot of mush for the Sunday page'! He sounded so cute!" Tony said, in a rush.

"Get your hat on," said Cliff. "I know a man named Burke who works on the sports section. We'll go down."

"You angel!" Tony called back, flying into her room to change. Brenda smiled at her oldest brother. "She's two girls," Brenda said. "She was down and out five minutes ago, no hope anywhere—she's been telling me what a failure she is—"

"Failure, shush! She's only twenty-three." Cliff was lighting a cigarette.

"How'd it go in Sacramento, darling?"

"Oh, I think I latched the switchboard, all right. However, we think we can work out of it."

Cliff put on his dump overcoat again, as Tony came out radiant and fresh in her dark blue coat and small hat, and they went away together.

CHAPTER III

"It's so much easier to go in there with you along, Cliff," Tony said, when they had left the street car and made a wet run for the lighted doorway of the big newspaper building.

"Sure," he said. "I hope Burke's there. He may not be, though."

The elevator flashed up past floors that were dark and deserted at eleven o'clock at night. They stepped out at the fourteenth floor; everything was brightly animated and exciting here, and Tony looked about her with avid interest at the glass-top doors that were opening and shutting continually upon seething inner apartments. A quiet girl at a telephone switchboard looked up.

"Mr. Greenwood?" The girl repeated the name cautiously into a black rubber mouthpiece. "There's a Miss Taft to see you here."

Tony followed her brother dazedly. Here was room 18, with "City Room" lettered in black on the door, and "Charles Greenwood" set modestly in a corner below it.

Cliff opened the door, and Tony had her first look at the city room. It angled the entire width of the building on two sides. The third side, she was presently to learn, was the Sunday paper department, and the fourth was variously divided by the library, the files, the photographers' labs. Down below were the business offices. Imposing in heavy chairs and eucalyptus panelling; up here everything was confusion, disorder, haste.

The instant her nostrils caught the first scent of it she knew that she belonged here; that this was her world, her battlefield, her first love. Men were everywhere; shouting, smoking. Typewriters were clicking; there was a ripping sound as paper was torn from them; there was a constant eccentric chatter of a telegraph machine from the wide littered desk marked "Associated Press." Tony saw men wearing green eyeshades, eyeglassed men; saw one very handsome big dark fellow speaking away about something to an older man at a corner desk.

PERPETUAL PUZZLES

These puzzles we have married are disturbingly feminine. They sit across the table from us and smile riddles. They treat us like spoiled children, and yet like kings. They ferret out our secret poker games—and collect! They devastate our reasoned actions by a caprice . . . and we love it.

How do these wives of ours manage to keep so young, so attractive, so full of life? Well, for one thing, they have learned that the advertising pages are their willing servants. Here they read of an appliance that turns mornings of drudgery into hours of leisure. There is a cosmetic blended to fit the skin like a glove. Or a new recipe to tempt your appetite.

Right now, your wife is busy with fall buying. And she lets the advertisements shoulder part of the task. They bring her good news about fall gowns and gloves, blankets, perhaps a fire screen, new slippers for you, a sweater for Junior . . . She reads the advertisements carefully and they save her time, trouble, worry—and money.

MEANEST ACT OF DEER SEASON IS UNCOVERED

Flint Hunter, Lost Two Days, Has Buck He Had Killed Stolen

What may go down in the history of the deer-hunting season in Michigan as the meanest act of the season was uncovered in the vicinity of Otsego Lake last Sunday.

A hunter from Flint had shot a buck and then lost his way in the woods. He nearly exhausted himself trying to find his way back to camp, reaching there at last, weak and tired.

The law say that the hunter who is found with deer hunting equipment should be eager to help the owner of the deer he is accused of killing. The accused hunter had no such desire.

When finally Flint appeared to see if opportunity had knocked, the buck was gone out of the woods. Instead of offering their assistance to search for the missing animal, the Flinters pretended they had forgotten to yield his deer and, when they placed one of their own metal tags

ANNUAL TB CHRISTMAS SEAL DRIVE UNDER WAY

Sixty-Two Million Seals Are Mailed to Michigan Residents

A campaign to tuberculosis Christmas seal committees in Michigan prepared to begin the second week of the Thanksgiving to Christmas sale, Ewen B. Elliott, state superintendent of public instruction, this week announced the Christmas seal movement here are the words of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association

"I am pleased to endorse the sale of tuberculosis Christmas seal for the benefit of those threatened or afflicted with the disease," said Superintendent Elliott. "It is commendable that for twenty-one years the people of Michigan have been fighting the white plague through the purchase of these seals. In several instances I have come in contact with people who have greatly benefited through the work done by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association.

"As far as possible, I urge individuals to support the movement, and trust that the sale this year will surpass that of other years."

Christmas seal headquarters in Lansing, Michigan Tuberculosis Association, said that reports received that early returns are good and that the sale looks a bigger one in 1935 increase. Seal sale committees throughout the state were elected and the booklet for the year is ready for distribution.

Seventy-six million tuberculosis seals were distributed in the state the past year.

FEDERAL POTATO CONTROL NOW EFFECTIVE

Will Not Include Crop Grown This Year, Commissioner Says

The federal Potato Control Act, which became effective Tuesday, December 3rd will not affect the Irish Cobbler crop and section only to potatoes grown and harvested after the late State Agricultural Commissioner James F. Thomson said after receiving hundreds of inquiries. He explained that many Michigan growers and buyers are anxiously awaiting information regarding the provisions of the act in the belief that they must use the Control stamps on all potatoes sold after December 1 regardless of when they were grown.

In response to the opinion that the crop was given early effect because such plantings are now being made in the southern part of the country, Thomson said now and the time for the next Michigan potato harvest all growers will be allocated amounts they will be allowed to sell tax free, Thomson said.

"The total amount allocated for the state is 14,700,000 bushels. Information from Washington is to the effect that all growers whose sales record show that they have been selling not more than 50 bushels of potatoes annually can obtain tax exemption stamp sufficient to cover sales if the amount of their actual average sales during the period from 1932 through 1934. The law requires that all potatoes not bearing a tax free stamp must carry a levy of 1½ cents per bushel.

Thomson anticipates large scale potato bootlegging next year, because both buyers and sellers are obligated under the law and subject to a fine for violation.

FIRE FIGHTING COST NEW LOW THIS YEAR

Amount Paid for Suppression Decreased From $93,000 to $18,000

Michigan's costs for forest fire suppression took a nose-dive this year due to the all-time low record in fire damages.

Total suppression costs to date for impressed labor, wages of keymen and rentals of private teams and tractors is $18,229.76. Impressed labor is paid 20 cents an hour; keymen, 25 cents.

Last year total suppression costs for the items mentioned and for the same period of time, was approximately $93,000.

M'CUTCHAN-CRAM WEDDING WAS AN EVENT OF THANKSGIVING DAY

On Thanksgiving evening a very beautiful wedding ceremony took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Alexander, at Central Lake, when their daughter, Leslie Jayne Cram, was united in marriage to R. B. McCutchan, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. McCutchan, of DeWitt.

To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Marjorie Jean Carey, of Charlevoix, the bridesmaid preceded the bride and groom and took their places under a canopy of white chrysanthemums and silver wedding bell.

The bride wore a gown of white satin with a white tulle veil, and carried a bouquet of salmon snapdragons and white pony mums. The bridesmaid, Miss Marion Smith, wore a long gown of light blue brocaded satin and carried a bouquet of yellow and burnt orange mums. The groom was attended by the bride's brother, Bill Cram. The bride was given in marriage by Mr. Alexander. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ray S. Ditterick, pastor of the Congregational church.

Mr. and Mrs. McCutchan will reside in DeWitt, Mich.

Guests at the wedding were: Mrs. R. J. McCutchan and son, Max, of DeWitt; Mr. and Mrs. Lynwood Taylor, of Lansing; Mrs. E. O. Cram, of Charlevoix; Mrs. J. L. Price, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Childs, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Curtis, Arthur Knowles, Ruth Bird; Helen Ruggles, Howard Mathers, Ira Burlew, Earl Steven, and Mrs. Otterback, all of Central Lake.

DEER SEASON CAME TO CLOSE SATURDAY

Kill of Both Deer and Bear Claimed to Be Lighter Than Last Year

Saturday brought to an end the deer hunting season and it is now assured that fewer bucks were killed this year than during the 1934 open season.

A number of local hunters who made expeditions early in the season which proved unsuccessful, hunted out the final days, hopeful of stumbling onto a buck before the season closed.

The kill of both deer and bear has been below that of last year, hunters and state conservation officials report.

IMPROVE LAKE FRONT NOW AT BOYNE CITY

Extensive WPA Program to Provide Bathing Facilities, Docks

Crews have started to dismantle the old railroad bridge and docks, also the mouth of the river, which is filled with old supporting piles, probably will be the next to get attention. The project under consideration will include a breakwater of ample proportions to shelter homecoming craft and deep enough to dock some of the larger yachts that visit the city. On each side in a natural curve, extending several city blocks, it is intended to make the beach accessible from any street in the vicinity.

This project also includes work on Boyne River to improve smelt dipping. Boyne Citizen.

LEGION ACTIVITIES
By F. V. Tyler

Due to the fact that the ladies of St. Mary's Guild are holding a Christmas feather party on Friday evening, December 20th, the local Legion post will not conduct a like affair, as has been its custom around Christmas time, in addition to the Thanksgiving kenoi party. The post would, to speak for the ladies of St. Mary's the same hearty support from the public that the Legion received at Thanksgiving time.

The December meeting of the Charlevoix County Veterans' Council, originally scheduled for the evening of Thursday, December 5th, will be omitted on account of conflicting holiday activities.

Thursday evening, December 19th, is the date that has been set by the post for a get-together Christmas party for Legionnaires and other veterans and their families. There will be a potluck supper and a program of entertainment—just a general good time.

There was an excellent attendance, Tuesday evening, at the regular meeting. Thanks are due to Comrades Merggison and Brandt, who so kindly furnished the major part of the appetizing lunch that followed the meeting and was hugely enjoyed.

Post-Holiday Dinners

Now that the last morsel of the Thanksgiving feast has been served, cleverly disguised in left-over dishes, the remains of the turkey has added its flavor to the soup pot—let's plan some dinners that will satisfy the desire for variety. As most of our food budgets are a bit "depleted" at this time, I have planned the following menus with accompanying recipes for variety, tastiness and economy:

Pineapple Juice Cocktail
Cabbage Rolls
Whole Wheat and White Breads
Jam
Orange Marmalade Pudding — Lemon Sauce
Coffee Milk

Cabbage Rolls

6 large cabbage leaves, 1½ cups water, 2 cups soft bread crumbs, ½ pound chopped round steak, 1 onion, minced, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 tablespoon butter, ½ green pepper, minced, ¼ teaspoon paprika, 1 small can tomatoes.

Parboil cabbage leaves in salt water. Moisten crumbs with water. Combine with meat, half the minced onion, salt and pepper. Form meat mixture into small rolls, wrap each in a cabbage leaf. Melt butter and add cabbage rolls, remaining minced onion, green pepper, paprika and tomatoes. Cook slowly over low fire 30 to 40 minutes.

Orange Marmalade Pudding

1 cup marmalade, 1 cup suet, 3 cups dried bread crumbs, ½ cup sweet milk, 1 egg, ½ cup blanched almonds, chopped, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon soda, 2 tablespoons hot water.

Mix ingredients in given order, adding soda dissolved in water. Put in greased mold and steam three hours. Serve with lemon sauce.

Lemon Sauce

1 cup sugar, 3 tablespoons flour, 1½ cups boiling water, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, ½ teaspoon salt, juice of lemon, grated lemon rind.

Sift the sugar and flour together. Add boiling water, stirring constantly. Cook until smooth and thick. Add lemon juice and rind, nutmeg and salt. Serve hot.

MENU NO. II
Cranberry Juice Cocktail
Round Steak Stew
Pear and Cream Cheese Salad
Tea Rolls Conserve
Peanut Butter Cookies
Coffee Milk

Round Steak Stew

1½ pounds round steak, cut thick, 2 tablespoons shortening, 4 cups water, ½ cup rice, 2 tablespoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 6 medium onions, 6 stalk celery.

Cut steak in strips about ½ inch wide and 4 or 5 inches long. Brown in shortening, cover with water, add seasoning and one onion and one celery stalk, sliced. Cover and cook slowly, about 1 hour. Add rice, whole onions and celery cut in 1-inch lengths. Simmer 15 minutes to 1 hour longer. Add water, if necessary, to prevent burning.

Peanut Butter Cookies

1 cup sweetened condensed milk, 6 tablespoons peanut butter, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¾ cup dry bread crumbs.

Combine condensed milk and peanut butter. Blend thoroughly. Add salt and crumbs, mixing well. Drop by spoonfuls onto buttered baking sheet. Bake in moderate oven 375 degrees for 15 minutes or until brown.

ISLE ROYALE

The campaign to have the government purchase Isle Royale and permanently add it to Michigan places of tourist interest seems to ebb and flow. One day the report comes from Washington that the grant has been made—the next day denied. To the practical downstate observer it would seem the purchase of this remote property would tend to build Canadian instead of Michigan travel. Also in the controversy that has taken place it has been repeatedly pointed out that the purchase price of $705,000 is some three times the amount down on the Keweenaw county assessment rolls. Naturally the question arises what does this mean per acre or per thousand feet of lumber, and is Uncle Sam being asked to play Santa Claus to the boys having island holdings.

If government funds are to be used to assist Michigan's bid for tourist business why not get nearer the center of tourist travel? Last summer an impassioned plea was made to save Michigan's greatest travel and resort asset, Mackinac Island, from slow starvation. When we tend to the Isle Royale purchase we overlook the fact that Mackinac Island, officially named as the "Most historic spot in Michigan," containing the oldest standing U. S. Army fort in the country and with nearly three hundred years of vibrant U. S. history behind it, and which is the geographical tourist center of Michigan's famous recreational facilities, is slowly going to seed. The 1935 season at the Island was the poorest in its 50 years of resort history. The Islander were not the loser primarily, but every part of Michigan traversed to reach the center suffered the loss of a million possible tourist dollars.

PHILATELIC

Michigan might with some becoming modesty lay claim to being the stamp state of the nation. Just now government Centennial stamps marking one hundred years of statehood are being sold through post office windows. During the hundred years that have passed, farmers, and thrifty householders with small parcels of ground, have been raising potatoes. The only challenge to their husbandry until the New Deal came along was bugs and blight during part of the growing season. Now another peril in government crop control is just ahead, necessitating another set of stamps which brings the following comment by the Detroit News:

"Government officials in Washington are fixing up the new potato stamps. These are not ordinary revenue stamps, since they are not expected to increase government revenues. They are to be stuck on the potato sacks to make the potatoes cost more.

"There are two kinds of stamps. One the farmer gets for nothing, though of course they cost the government quite a lot for printing and issuing. These free stamps the farmer sticks on the number of bushels of potatoes the government will let him sell tax-free.

"The other stamps show that three-fourths of a cent a pound has been paid as a tax. Since generally the farmers won't see any profit in paying a tax of 45 cents a bushel for the privilege of marketing their potatoes, they are not expected to buy many of the pay stamps. The pay stamp is supposed to do to the potatoes about what the AAA did to the 6,000,000 little pigs—it keeps them from going to market.

WHY NOT HERE?

In a number of communities surrounding Detroit, heerless gardens are being established for the entertainment of the young people who do not care to attend the dances held in places where beer is served. Why cannot such an amusement enterprise be established right here in Northville? We have two churches with rooms suitable for such an enterprise, not to mention the high school gym, and could they be put to better use than to provide clean, wholesome amusement for the young people of the community? Committees could be selected from among our young married set and our own young people who enjoy dancing and clean entertainment could be properly chaperoned right here at home instead of permitting them to visit questionable places which require an automobile ride home late at night. Many sad stories come out of these roadside speakeasy-dance halls in which young people from splendid homes are involved. We read about them but give them little attention until some neighbor's boy or girl is involved. For every one of these young people who go astray in these beer joints the community in which they reside is responsible because no better place has been provided for their entertainment. Let's not condemn the youth of today if we are not interested enough in their future welfare to throw about them influences and an environment that will be helpful and inspiring. — Richard T. Baldwin in the Northville Record.

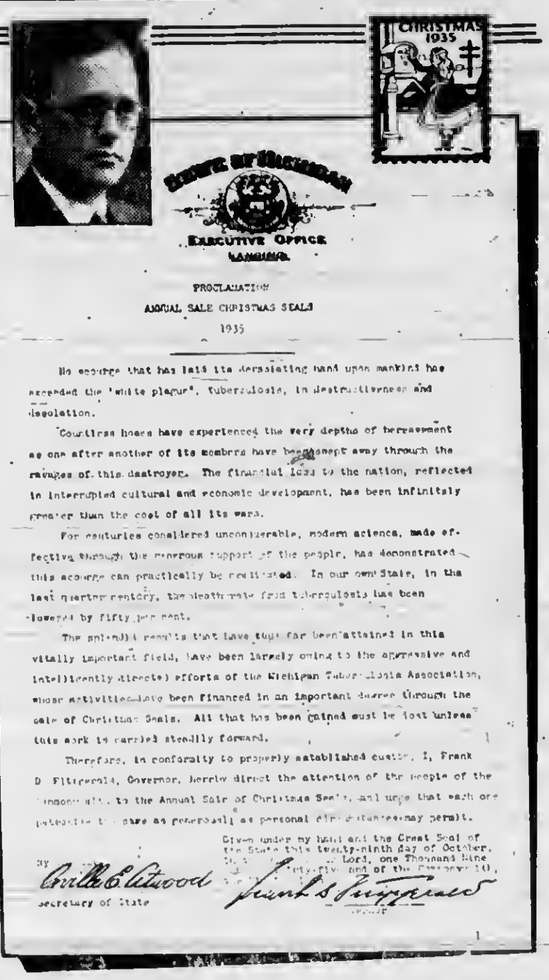
FIND READY SALE FOR GOOD HORSES

Horses apparently do not believe all they read in the automobile advertisements about the public demand for new body lines because 40 of the animals mounted on the same old style chassis found ready buyers at a consignment sale held at Michigan State College.

The average price paid at the sale was $193.79 and the high price was for a pair of mares, $615. Purebred horses sold for a little more than $50 per head higher than grades of the same type and weight. The sales committee had difficulty in locating in Michigan sufficient high class animals for the sale, and the committee predicts a brisk trade in horses next spring.

Anger or other passions aroused, reason dethroned.

Gov. Fitzgerald Endorses Christmas Seal Sale



CHRISTMAS 1935
EXECUTIVE OFFICE
LANSING
PROCLAMATION
ANNUAL SALE CHRISTMAS SEALS
1935
No enemy that has laid its devastating hand upon mankind has exceeded the 'white plague', tuberculosis, in destructiveness and desolation.
Countless homes have experienced the very depths of bereavement as one after another of its members have been swept away through the ravages of this destroyer. The financial loss to the nation, reflected in interrupted cultural and economic development, has been infinitely greater than the cost of all its wars.
For centuries considered unconquerable, modern science, made effective through the generous support of the people, has demonstrated this scourge can practically be restricted. In our own State, in the last quarter century, the death rate from tuberculosis has been lowered by fifty per cent.
The splendid results that have thus far been attained in this vitally important field, have been largely owing to the aggressive and intelligently directed efforts of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, whose activities have been financed in an important degree through the sale of Christmas Seals. All that has been gained must be lost unless this work is carried steadily forward.
Therefore, in conformity to properly established custom, I, Frank D. Fitzgerald, Governor, hereby direct the attention of the people of the Commonwealth to the Annual Sale of Christmas Seals, and urge that each one interested to the fullest as personal circumstances may permit.
Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this twenty-ninth day of October, in the Year of our Lord, one Thousand Nine Hundred Thirty-five and of the Commonwealth the one hundred and tenth.
By the Governor
Orla A. Attwood
Secretary of State
Frank D. Fitzgerald

ABOVE is a facsimile of the proclamation issued by Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald, endorsing the sale of tuberculosis Christmas Seals in the State of Michigan. The sale is opened officially on Thanksgiving Day and continues through to Christmas. Fifty-eight million tuberculosis Christmas seals are being distributed in the state this year by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association. The money raised in this way supports all activities of the Association.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Close observation over a period of 30 years convinces us that the vast majority of the people of this country are opposed to the socialization of the electric or any other industry. During this period about 4,000 municipally owned electric plants were established and at the end of 1932 only 1,861 survived. During the five-year period from 1927 to 1932, only 84 new municipal plants appeared and 612 municipal plants were transferred to commercial companies. This tremendous switch from municipal to private ownership was voted for by local communities in nearly all cases.

Just at the time when municipal ownership, by the will of the people, was at its lowest ebb, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who had always been a public ownership advocate, was elected President of the United States, and immediately put under way a program to completely socialize the electrical industry, despite the fact that his party platform and his campaign pledges were, "to remove the government from all fields of private enterprise." — Public Service Magazine.

CHARACTER BUILDING

Any community which does not at this time guard the interests of its boys and girls and unemployed men and women is committing a mistake for which it is bound to pay later. The question before us today is how best to maintain those things which are essential to civic and industrial well-being with the funds at our disposal. The past has shown us that crime, ill health, and loss of morale are expensive. We spend millions of dollars each year on police courts and prisons. Experience should have taught us by this time the value and economy of reinforcing essential service. It is not a question of whether or not as citizens of a community we can afford a character building and recreational program at this time, but rather whether we can afford to get along without one. Youth cannot wait for a return of better days. Courage, morale, and wise guardiance are needed today for all ages, as they have seldom been in the history of our country.—Newton D. Baker.

LIFE'S IDEALS

In order to leave the world better for having lived in it one ought to do more than just keep the law of the land and keep out of jail. One ought to do more than pay taxes and other debts and contribute his share to charity. He should be word- and deeds stimulate high standards and put courage into the souls of those who falter and feel like giving up. One should leave imprints of spiritual as well as material service, and have a distinct part in fashioning a better world.—Wayne (Neb.) Herald.

TRAGIC RESULT!

When their entire force of employes refused to return to work after a four-week strike for union recognition, officers and directors of the A-B Stove Company, Battle Creek, decided to liquidate the business and retire from the manufacturing field. When this decision was reached the firm which had been a going concern for many years had the fifth largest payroll in the Food City. Throughwise and able management it had been able to stem the tide of depression and furnish hundreds of jobs for workers during the worst period of unemployment in the history of this nation. There was no dispute over wages or working conditions, which were satisfactory. Before union agitators entered the picture they had all the appearance of a big happy family free from any discordant note. Now these workers, perhaps many too old to seek work elsewhere, are permanently out of a job so far as the stove company is concerned; and another distress problem of relief and unemployment is created just as winter approaches. Comment, beyond pointing out the kind of agitation that is being fomented in all industrial centers, would be superfluous.

HEIR APPARENT

One story which is going the rounds is that Senator Vandenberg is to be the ultimate heir of the Knox and Landon followings. The Senator has played an astute game in recent months everyone admits. He absented himself in Europe while Knox was accumulating his following. He has maintained friendly relations with all of the candidates, and is regarded as the one prominent possibility who would be certain of the support of Borah and the campaign. He would be the beneficiary of the deep moving desire of many Western Republicans to clip the wings of the Eastern leaders in the convention. However, like all those who are now under discussion, his plan must contain a Hoover "if" clause. Many of the most prominent national leaders, recognizing the prematureness of the talk of candidates, are urging that party attention be diverted from men to issues, at least until after the meeting of the next session of Congress.

DIGEST POLL

For the fourth time since the landing gentleman from Hyde Park became president two years and eight months ago the Literary Digest is launching a nation-wide poll to ascertain the popularity of the New Deal, and first results are expected to be ready to publish during this month. Michigan's allotment of ballots was mailed November 5, and prompt expression, on each question, will be taken as a reliable report on this state's popular feeling. The Digest has been surprisingly successful in forecasting election returns in the past. Seven of eleven polls conducted in advance of elections predicted results. In the 1932 presidential campaign the Digest predicted Roosevelt would receive 56.84 per cent of the popular vote. Official returns showed the President received 59.14 per cent. After three years of costly experimenting on the part of the administration, it will be interesting to find out what people think now.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul; skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Insist on substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

Mrs. Greenwood was a dark, handsome girl—who occupied a corner desk shut away from the reporters' office only by a nickel and bronze railing of dark wood with a gate. She was in her shirt sleeves this afternoon. A great clerk, Clifford and Tony were assured, like his immediate neighborhood.

The door before the city editor was at present littered with the society pages of recent Sunday papers. He had evidently been clipping, and pasting descriptions; he balanced a drawer full of interesting looking letters.

"We got to have a page of this stuff, good!" he said. "You Madame La Dutchess! That's the swell stuff, see—the Burlingame crowd, the Hillsdales, see? You know their crowd, don't you?" he had turned to ask suspiciously, looking up at Tony.

"Well, now, look here. You'll have Dorothy down, that's what the boys called me last Madame," Greenwood broke off to say, appealing to their sympathy. "She was a Hellcat; she just raised hell on here, and she's got everything up a mess! Now, when you came here to leave your name—what was that?"

"Three times since Christmas, Tony reminded him.

"You said that you thought you could handle it?" was the stern question.

"I—"

"You made statin that every Thursday we've got to have a whole page of it with two photos?"

Her heart [illegible] second.

"Certain," Tony said with a reassuring nod.

"You can cop a lot of it by to-morrow, see? Barbara Ann Greenwood further explained. "Look over the papers; I've got the Oakland papers here too, and pick out whatever looks good to you. I won't be here, but you give it to Mr. Florence he's that drunk book-keeper over there—"

—"All right," the stranger at the desk said stolidly. "All right."

"Get it all together and hand it in before ten tomorrow night. And you'll have to get your own column, too—say about sixteen items; get em good, because we've been rumpling down lately, and the old man was raising hell about it today. You run around among your friends, and you'll pick 'em up easy. Then if you run into any good still women scrapping bring that in, that's always good. Keep your eyes open, eh, and by the way, you'll be at that dance down at the Burlingame club next week, will you?"

"All right, then you take all this stuff along to your desk, MacGrath!" flouted the city editor. "Help Miss—help Miss Tait to take all this stuff to the clerk's desk, will you, and run the boy up a typewriter somewhere, and get my society paper. She's going to cover Society page tomorrow, and boy, she'll do good! All right—Miss Tait, I'll see you Friday—keep your shirt on and ask the boys for anything you want. Oh, and by the way, rout us out a couple of good pictures tomorrow for Sunday. I didn't get round to it!"

Tony and Clifford and the amiably bearded MacGrath went to a cluttered desk by a black window that was trickling rain. Everyone looked at her; Tony did not dare raise her eyes.

She found her new domain frightfully dirty and the typewriter frame empty.

"I'll have Larkin get you a typewriter down stairs," said MacGrath, in embarrassed apology. "There isn't a decent one on the floor. Looky, here's the book they keep the names in—who's in society, and who's married to whose sisters, and all that."

Tony clutched the shabby leather record eagerly.

"Oh, that'll be priceless!"

"Could I—just to get this stuff in order—could I come down tomorrow early—say about ten?" she asked. "He told me to come in at one. But I'd like to get started—"

"Oh, gosh, come at seven if you want to!" MacGrath said with a stare.

"Is there a ruby named Burke working here?" Clifford now found a lull in which to ask.

"Sure. Spike, where's Burke? He's usually in the sports," said MacGrath, "Come here."

He shook the slurred back of a stalwart young man who was washing not only his face, but his whole head and his arms up to the elbow at one of the lavatories. This person, dripping and sudsy, turned about with a loud "Quit!"

"Oh hello, Vint," Joe Burke said, then added, beaming over the filthy roller towel in a froth of white, "Hello, Miss Tait—say, what a break! What's doing?"

While he quite without embarrassment dried his face and hands, rolled down his sleeves, put on a collar and combed his thick red hair, they told him what was doing, and Tony beamed hopefully into his pleasant red-brown eyes.

"Sure, you can work that society racket like a shot!" Joe Burke told her heartening[ly]. "It's soft."

"Oh, I hope it is!" Tony said, with a smile, with a lift of thick lashes, with a great rise of her heart.

"Listen, let's eat," Mr. Burke said abruptly.

They went up Market street to Lorenzo's, where Tony and Cliff had hot delicious "hash and hobs" and toast, and Joe had a huge pink veal cutlet that had been seized from a long damp pan of cutlets displayed in Lorenzo's window, rolled in egg and crumbs, blackened in a pan of hot grease, smothered in gory catsup and served smoking hot with fried potatoes within the space of six minutes. With this Joe had coffee that had been simmering all day in a black pot, spongy bread, and coconut custard pie.

The little restaurant with the window grill was bright and warm on the rainy night; the clock stood at twelve, and Tony felt excited and happy. This was living! There were several men having veal chops and oyster stews in Lorenzo's, and presently her brother was surprised to see her flush and smile a little self consciously and bow to one of them.

"Who's that?"

"It's Mr Bellamy of the Journal."

"That's right, too," said Joe. "I don't know him, but I've seen him in here before. He's pretty thick with old Veach—on on our paper. Arnold says [illegible] Fitch. Fitch is the managing editor that he thought Bellamy was the smartest man on the coast, except maybe Anders down in Frisco."

Tony knew that the man who was having oysters at the counter was watching her; she looked absorbedly at Joe.

"Is Mr. Greenwood smart, Mr Burke?"

"He is and he isn't," said Joe. "He's a terrible sorrer. Here's Moore. Sit down, Buck. This is the new society editor, Miss Taft. Miss Taft, Buck Moore of the Sunday edition. You'll have to see a lot of old Buck!"

Tony hardly heard him. She was thrilled; she was happy. The romantic dark—brilliant Mr. Bellamy had seen her alone and forlorn and supplicatory this morning in the dreary rain; he saw her tonight with three good looking men having oysters at Lorenzo's. And to Mr Moore she had been introduced as the Call's society editor.

CHAPTER IV.

Oh, it was good to have a job again, and to have it spring, and morning, and to be twenty three! Tony awakened eagerly, dressed with enthusiasm, finished her breakfast, and piled her coffee cup and berry saucer in the sink. Then came a blank.

"How do you suppose I can get those photographs for Sunday, Brenda?"

"I've been wondering," Brenda said. "Would any of the photographers help out, do you think?"

"I don't think they'd be allowed to give out pictures for the papers. Just the same they're my best bet!" Tony decided uneasily. She left the house at nine o'clock and went to six photographers. It was always the same. It was not permitted, they said they were sorry.

At five minutes to one she went into the newspaper office, all the first enthusiasm of the new job clouded by a sense of fear and failure. She hung her hat and coat in the office and confided her problem to Joe Burke.

"Oh, shucks," Joe said. "I'll tell you what you can do. Look over the other Sunday papers for the last few weeks, and telephone the studios for what you want."

"But I've just been to the studios, and they were awfully mean!"

"They won't be, if you want pictures that have been used. Or telephone the girls, if you like," Joe suggested briskly. "Just say that you are going to use an old picture and would like permission to have a new one."

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

Simple food at moderate prices is the need this week and the markets are well equipped to meet it. While many vegetables are higher due to colder weather there are still a number in the low priced group, particularly rutabaga, carrots, and potatoes. Turnips, parsnips, onions, kale and bulk beets are also very reasonable. Small heads of lettuce, grapefruit and oranges are moderate in price. Eggs are somewhat cheaper and butter remains fairly steady at high levels.

Low Cost Dinner

Veal Stew with Vegetable and Potatoes
Cole Slaw
Bread and Butter
Chocolate Pudding
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

NEW DEBT ADJUSTMENT SERVICE IS PROVIDED

Information Regarding Aid By Writing to County Farm Agent

The Resettlement Administration has recently provided a federally supervised Farm Debt Adjustment service for each county in Michigan, it was announced at Madison today by R. I. Newell, regional director for Region II, consisting of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

This service contemplates a fair and impartial adjustment of the farmer's debts, based upon his assets and his ability to pay.

Such adjustment is a distinctly beneficial service to the debtor, the creditor and the community.

Farmers who have been unable to refinance their real estate indebtedness should be especially interested in the program. Difficulties due to chattel mortgages and farm leases also will be considered. Further announcements concerning the program are expected soon.

In the meantime, farmers whose debt problems are distressing them, can receive immediate attention by writing or calling at the county agent's office or by addressing the Debt Adjustment Unit, Resettlement Administration, 401 Mutual Building, Lansing.

The service is directed from Regional Headquarters at Madison, Wis., with W. T. Ferrier in charge. District supervisors under the direction of Clarence H. Wright, regional specialist at Lansing, will assist local county committees in carrying out the program.

GAME LAW VIOLATORS ARE DENIED LICENSES

Fifty-Five Barred From Sport Due to Infractions This Year

As a result of a violation of the conservation laws, 55 residents of Michigan have no legal right to hunt and trap small game.

Since they are ineligible to obtain licenses, they cannot have gun permits to carry firearms into the woods and fields either to shoot predators or for target practice.

Most of the 55 residents are forbidden to hunt and trap small game until October 1, 1936—remainder of the current license year, says the Department of Conservation. Five of that number cannot obtain small-game hunting or trapping licenses during all of 1936 and until October 1, 1937, when another license year begins.

Under an act passed by the 1935 Legislature, justices of the peace, in their discretion, may disqualify a respondent from obtaining a small-game hunting or trapping license during [illegible] of the current year and for the whole of the succeeding license year.

ALCOHOL CANNOT BE TAKEN PURE WITH SAFETY

Ethyl alcohol is so poisonous that it cannot with safety be taken pure, indeed, the customary drinks contain only a small proportion of it, much less than one-half, about four per cent, cider nine per cent, wine 11 to 42 per cent, while the drinks of the higher alcoholic percentages, whisky, rum, gin, brandy, with around 50 per cent alcohol are mixed with more water when drunk. These drinking customs are the result of years of experiment, so that people have learned how much alcohol can be taken and the mind and body seemingly recover. The result is like learning how much sand can be sifted into a Wyllis-Knight engine without stopping it completely. The degree of intoxication is determined not by the amount of liquor taken into the stomach but by the amount of alcohol which is absorbed into the blood where it comes into direct contact with the nervous system. . . . When alcohol accumulates in man's blood till every 1000 parts contain five parts of alcohol he dies. The alcohol is absorbed into the blood very rapidly, but is disposed of very slowly, and the effects last after it has disappeared.—From Palmer's "Alcohol Education Series." TIRES RUN COOLER

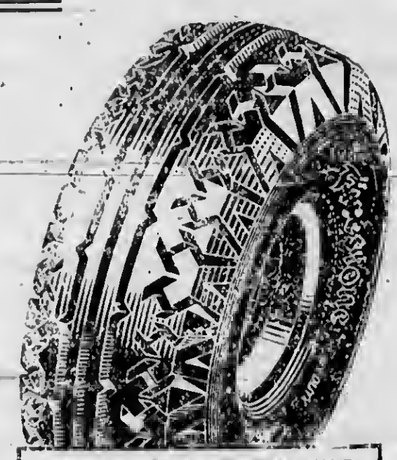
As a tire rolls down the road it tends to flatten out and bulge when under load, and to resume its shape as it turns and the load is released. This movement or action in the sidewall of the tire is called flexing.



At some time or other, all of us have bent wires or pieces of metal back and forth to break them and have noticed the heat which develops. This is because the tiny molecules within the metal, rubbing together, create heat. In like manner, heat develops from the flexing action in the cord body of the tire because of the rubbing together of the cotton fibers. At 45 miles per hour, the average tire flexes 30,000 times an hour. Imagine, then, the heat generated in the cords in an hour's fast driving.

At higher speeds on long distance runs, heat builds up faster and higher. As the heat increases, the danger of tire blowouts becomes greater. Finally, the heat reaches the point where the rubber softens, the cords break down and the tire blows out.

Firestone developed and patented a process which remedied this danger. This process is Gum-Dipping, which saturates and insulates the fibers and strands in the cord with rubber, preventing friction.

Prepare your car NOW for winter driving. Visit the dealer listed below and ask him to check your tires. Remember, if they show signs of danger, it is better to change to new tires than to run the risk of a sudden blow-out and the subsequent damage that often follows. And when you change, by all means change to new Firestones. Then you are sure your tires are right and that you can depend on many months of dependable service.

MICHIGAN POTATOES AIDED BY GRADING

Bringing Highest Prices On City Market In Chicago

Michigan's potato grading laws have resulted in premium prices on the Chicago market, James F. Thomson, commissioner of agriculture, said today.

"While Minnesota and Wisconsin potatoes are bringing from $1 to $1.15 per hundred pound sacks, Michigan potatoes are bringing shippers as high as $1.40," Thomson said.

The state's crop this year will approximate 24,000,000 bushels compared with 31,000,000 bushels in 1934 and the 10-year average production of 23,715,000 bushels.

"Confusion of thought and lack of conviction are the plague of Christianity today," says Dr. Clarence E. Macartney. Ministers have chosen to deal with the by-products of Christian life and conduct rather than the cardinal doctrines.

Continuing for the next several weeks, we will deal with the cardinal doctrines of the Christian Faith and we have chosen the Apostles' Creed, known to almost all Christians regardless of creed, as the basis for this series.

Next Sunday we will use for our subject, "God," and we will set forth a few of the reasons that cause us to believe in God.

We wish to express our appreciation to those who attended the Thanksgiving service last Thursday morning. The attendance went beyond our expectation. Already we are planning on a more complete service for next year.

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (pp. 268, 269): "Belief in a material basis, from which may be deduced all rationality, is slowly yielding to the idea of a metaphysical basis, looking away from matter to mind as the cause of every effect . . . The testimony of the material senses is neither absolute nor divine."

FARM WOMEN STUDYING USE OF ELECTRICITY

Surveys Being Made In Many Counties for Extension of Power Lines

Reports made by Michigan county agricultural agents for the past few months prove that Michigan women are aware of the advantages of electrical energy for the lightening of household tasks.

Surveys are being made in many counties to find if it is possible for farm homes to be serviced with electricity under the provisions of the new laws. One agent reports that petitions for 75 miles of power line have been presented by farmers in his county. The surveys, in most cases, are being made in cooperation with companies now selling electrical energy.

Michigan has been the leading state for four successive years in the number of new rural users of electricity. The power is very convenient for driving machines such as saws, grinders, and silage cutters, but the women on the farm are more concerned with energy for lights and for pumps so that water systems can be installed in the homes.

Experts in the agricultural engineering department at Michigan State College have been working for years to find the most economical and practical systems for use of electricity in farm homes. Plans for wiring and for water systems to be used with electric motors are available for those who care to write for them.

Members of the home economics department at the college have studied the use of household electrical appliances and are ready to give this information to those who want it. Electrical power rightly used is one of the best servants available but expert opinion should be sought before wiring a farmstead so that any dangers and any waste of money can be avoided.

LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

By Lois L. Bedwin

* * * * * * * * * * *

Regular business meeting was held at the Legion hall Monday evening with 11 members present. We would like to have more members attend these meetings. Addie Glossinger deserves much credit for the attendance of a goodly number of those who were present, as she goes out after them, and when she "toots her horn at the door" they have to have a good excuse for not going. If others who can would do that, we might have a good attendance. Good deeds are always rewarded, you know, so Addie has something coming. It is good to know you have something coming.

There are going to be some very interesting events between now and the first of the year and we are sure other members will not wish to miss any of them.

We were surprised and pleased when we saw how nicely the boys have remodeled the dugout. The new outside rear entrance is a real convenience which we all appreciate, and the ceiling, whitewashed walls and enlargement of space all make much improvement.

A special social meeting is called for next Monday evening, December 9th, at Bedwin Lodge, 205 Dixon avenue. Please bring sewing needles, thimbles and your glasses. You will not have to work very hard, as it is only basting, and after that we "eat" which should create enough interest to get most of us out. It is to be a potluck and is only the beginning of much more interesting events which are to take place in the near future. Get in on the start and do not miss any of them.

We would like to make up a service basket that evening for one of our convalescent veterans, so please bring some article dear to the heart of man, such as shaving cream, cigarettes, razor blades, candy, etc., if you can, but if not, we will welcome your attendance anyway.

Stirring Film of Melodrama Stars Fonda

A drama which, more than forty years ago, first portrayed the triumph of young love over merciless self-righteousness and bigotry, again lets the attention of audiences as Fox Film's picturization of America's greatest melodrama, "Way Down East," comes Saturday and Sunday, December 7-8, to the Palace Theatre.

The locale of the drama is New England in the 1890's, and much of its action is centered about the farm of Russell Simpson, a stern, bigoted, righteous farmer.

TRAVERSE TROJANS BEAT CHARLEVOIX

Kipmen Gave Best Performance of Season In Close Contest — Play at Petoskey Friday

Charlevoix cagers were nosed out in a last-quarter rally by Traverse City' Class B Trojans at Traverse last Friday night, 21 to 18. It was the first time Traverse has turned the trick in several years of annual competition.

Still carrying on without the services of Joe Schwab, veteran guard, and minus Pearl, forward, in the final minutes, the Kipmen played their best game of the season and showed capabilities for the future.

Traverse started fast, getting up a 7 and 1 advantage in the first quarter. Charlevoix came to the front in the second period, piling up eight point while holding the Trojans without a count. Charlevoix led 12 to 7 at the half with Pearl, Radle and Gallagher leading the assault.

The Kipmen continued strong in the third session and, although outscored 4 to 2 for the period, went to the final quarter with a 14 to 11 advantage. The lead soon vanished, however, as Traverse connected with three deuces in succession for a 17 to 14 advantage and matched goals by Gallagher and Carey to maintain their three-point margin. Pearl was forced out of the game in the last quarter with a shoulder injury.

ISLE ROYALE WILL BECOME NATIONAL PARK

Federal Funds Are Set Aside to Purchase Private Lands

Allotment of $705,000 to purchase 121,000 acres of private land on Isle Royale in Lake Superior for eventual development as a national park was announced Thursday by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes.

Two or three Civilian Conservation Corps companies will be assigned to the area, he said, "as soon as weather permits" to continue site improvement and fire hazard reduction work. One company previously there was evacuated a month ago.

REHEARSALS UNDER WAY FOR A CHRISTMAS PLAY

MRS. WILLIAM SHAW IS TAKEN BY DEATH

Succumbed at Marion Twp Home; Funeral and Burial Wednesday

GOLDEN WEDDING EVENT OF MONDAY

MR. AND MRS. WM. WITHERS WEDDED HALF CENTURY

Occasion Observed at Marion Township Home With Family Gathering and Dinner

The occasion, the 50th wedding anniversary of the esteemed couple, was celebrated with a family party, opening with a 6:30 dinner, followed by an evening of visiting and merriment.

Mr. and Mrs. Withers, the former 76, and Mrs. Withers aged 75, were married December 9, 1885, in Clare. They came to Petoskey and from that point to Charlevoix by stage coach. They resided a short time in a small cabin until the home they now occupy, one of the finer rural dwellings of Marion township, was completed from lumber sawed from the logs which Mr. Withers cleared from the homestead site. Mr. Withers now operates the Marion Center Dairy, one of Charlevoix's pioneer industries. The fine, modern home, a pure-bred herd of Holstein cattle, modernly equipped dairy and farm building are mute evidences of the thrift and diligence of the owners.

Attending the pleasant festivities were the children of the couple with their families, viz.: Clarence and Harold, of this city, and Mrs. Florence Williams, of Marion; the five grandchildren; Mrs. Withers' only brother, Albert Black, and Mr. Withers' only brother, Robert Withers, and wife, of this city.

The couple were the recipients of cards of congratulation and fine gifts from their many friends.

NORTHERN COACHES ACCEPT NEW RULES

Met at Petoskey With State Athletic Director Monday Night

All of the new basketball rules will be observed and enforced in Northern Michigan competition this year, it was decided Monday evening at a meeting of coaches and faculty representatives with C. A. Forsythe, director of high school athletics, held in the Petoskey gymnasium.

Spirited discussion took place over the three second time limit for a member of the attacking team to remain in the free throw area. Mr. Forsythe declared officials would be instructed to use careful judgment in calling the penalty for infraction of this rule.

Many instances occur, he said, when it would work a hardship if the rule were strictly enforced.

STATE PRODUCED MILLION AND HALF BARRELS OF OIL

A total of 1,105,000 barrels of oil were produced by Michigan wells during the month of November, the state Producer's Committee announced.

The figure pushed the year's production to more than 14,000,000 barrels, and marked the 11th consecutive month that the Michigan wells produced more than a million barrels of crude oil.

REGIONAL MEETING DECEMBER 3 AT PETOSKEY

Michigan Winter Queen to Be Chosen From Candidates Sponsored by Sports Clubs of Region

Thirty-eight representatives from nine winter sports clubs of Northern Michigan sat down to a get-together dinner Tuesday evening, December 3, at the Perry Hotel dining room, Petoskey. The meeting was presided over by Wilson McDonald, secretary of the Petoskey Chamber of Commerce.

The object of the meeting was to discuss winter sports club plans for the winter season.

The outstanding feature of the tentative plans will be the election of a regional winter sport queen for the district. The race for the election of the regional queen will be Friday, January 24, 1936, at Petoskey. Three general judges, consisting of two men and one woman, will select the regional queen. The individual winter sport clubs need not elect a winter sports queen, if their individual clubs. The queen for Harbor Springs will be elected before January 14. The local queen will be a candidate for regional queen honor. She must be over 16 and unmarried.

Tentative plans were also outlined for hockey team leagues. Seven districts have signified their willingness to enter the hockey leagues, of which there will be A and B divisions.

Charlevoix was represented at the winter sports club council by H. A. Craig; F. E. Carter, A. L. Livingston, E. J. Edward O. P. North and Dean Davenport. The winter sports club regional district extends to Alpena. Alpena had three representatives present.

The Petoskey queen is to be coronated on February 7. The dates of the winter sports carnivals in this region are: Alpena, January 23-26; Grayling, January 23-25; Boyne City, January 15-18; Cheboygan, January 31-February 1; Petoskey, February 7-16, Harbor Springs, February 1-2.

CITY WIPES OUT SEWAGE DISPOSAL INDEBTEDNESS

Final Payment to Contractors Release from Future Obligations

The last regular payroll approved by the city council included the final payment of indebtedness incurred by the sewage disposal plant, it is understood.

Through payment of $1,250 to the Christman-Lansing Co., contractors, the city was released from any and all obligations through the sewage disposal plant construction. This final payment concluded lengthy litigation brought about by claims forwarded by the contractors.

At the same time, the council authorized the mayor and clerk to requisition the PWA for final grant due the city in the amount of approximately $4,000.

The first of the series of sewage disposal revenue bonds in the amount of $2,000 will fall due on January 1, 1936.

PLAN COMMUNITY XMAS DECORATION

BRIDGE STREET TO EXEMPLIFY THE YULE SPIRIT

Council Takes Immediate Action and Asks Cooperation of the Merchants in Program

Charlevoix will present the atmosphere of Yuletide not only in spirit but in appearance when plan of the city council for Christmas decorations are completed.

Following the example of many previous years, a large community Christmas tree will be erected at the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets. The city will furnish colored electric light for decorations.

Other details of the plan include the decoration of boulevard lamp posts on both side of Bridge street with evergreens, following the plan of a year ago. Business men are being asked to furnish smaller trees to be placed in the flag staff holes in front of each establishment, also to carry out the plan of decorating with colored lights similar to the community tree.

The matter, when brought before the council, was turned over to the committee on streets with power to act and Chairman J. J. Hallett is directing the program.

The council also voted the usual $35 appropriation to the American Legion for the purchase of candy and nuts to be distributed among children of the community at a program to be held at the Legion hall. Legion officer are now making plans for this annual Christmas feature.

RECREATIONAL PROGRAM OPEN MONDAY

DEAN DAVENPORT, DIRECTOR, ANNOUNCES 12 PROJECTS

Charlevoix Program to Include Municipal Ice Rink, Indoor Athletics, Manual Arts and Others

A WPA recreational program, similar to that conducted last winter under the ERA, will be started in Charlevoix county on Monday, December 16, according to Dean Davenport, county director.

Following several week of organization work, Mr. Davenport has announced that twelve projects have been arranged and, while approval on all has not been received, a portion of the program is ready to start.

The present uncompleted list of projects includes five in Charlevoix, three at Boyne City, two at East Jordan, and one each at Boyne Falls and Ironton.

The Charlevoix projects include the municipal skating rink, providing supervised ice sports. Harry Marshall will have charge of the rink maintenance, with Edgar Smith, Charles Howard and Harry Dixon assisting.

Indoor athletics will be under the supervision of Ray Kipke, with George Richardson and Linn Stebbins as assistants. The program will include basketball, baseball, volleyball, boxing and other indoor games.

The manual arts program will be supervised by Ward Richardson. The program will be similar to that of last year, providing those who enroll furnish their own materials.

A class in knitting, fancy needle work and discussions on household hints, will be directed by Mrs. Helen Halverson.

Class discussions on mechanics, mathematics and science will be conducted by Billy O'Neil.

Those desiring to enroll in the various projects are directed to get in touch with the supervisor named. The schedule of hours and other details of the program will then be outlined.

Mr. Davenport announced that additional projects, one in particular a county-wide band music group, will be organized if and when sufficient interest is manifest.

CARL BARNHART FIRST LOCAL SEAL PURCHASE

Becomes Charlevoix's First and Is New Association Member

First buyer of tuberculosis Christmas seals in Charlevoix is Carl Barnhart, officials of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association announce.

Mr. Barnhart's purchase, besides being Charlevoix's first, added a new member to the Association's Order of First Seal Buyers and a new name to the Christmas seal honor roll.

Helping to continue the fight against the White Plague during 1936, the sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals will be continued throughout the nation until Christmas Day. In Michigan, 62,000,000 seals were distributed this year. Funds raised will support the activities of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and affiliated units during the coming year.

Dr. Bruce H. Douglas, president of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, commended the generous spirit which is bringing early returns from communities all over Michigan.

"It is fine to know that people throughout the state are supporting the cause so enthusiastically," said Dr. Douglas. "It would be difficult to estimate the good their contributions will accomplish. Their generosity means new hope for hundreds of tuberculosis sick in Michigan."

CHAPTER IV

"Yes, but have we old pictures?"

"Lord, haven't you seen the gallery?"

He took her in there, and she began to feel excited and happy and confident again. When she came back to her desk she telephoned a downtown studio firmly, authoritatively. This was the society editor of the Call speaking.

"I can have the prints there for you in an hour," the voice promised, Tony felt almost giddy with relief, and laughed aloud.

She sat working in a sea of clippings and notes; she was conscious of the increasing stir about her. Men were bringing in, gossiping and smoking; they all looked curiously at her, and she knew it, although she did not look up. The city editor came in and chatted with her, sitting edgewise on her desk, picking his teeth; every moment that passed made her feel more and more that she belonged here, that she was holding her own and yet the fluttered sensation of uncertainty and novelty persisted, too.

Tony worked away industriously. She clipped, pasted, counted words, her face grew hot and her hair tumbled; it seemed to her that a tide of paper was rising steadily about her.

Mr. Florence, acting for the absent editor, asked her for her "stuff" for tomorrow. Tony produced it anxiously. He took it without comment; presently came back to ask: "Oughtn't we have the Harriman bridesmaids?"

"Oh, should we?" Tony asked agitatedly, her heart hammering and her mouth dry. "How do I—shall I go out there?"

"No, I'll get 'em for you," a nice boy named Slosser volunteered lazily, from the adjoining desk. He whirled the leaves of a telephone book that was stuffed up to three times its size. "That's the Paul Harrimans," he muttered. Presently he was penciling hurriedly; he tossed a scribbled sheet to Tony's desk. "There they are," he told her carelessly. "You fix 'em up."

Her telephone rang; she answered it apprehensively. But it was the apathetic Henrietta on the switchboard; Miss Taft's sister was there, and should she send her up?

Tony went eagerly to the door to meet Brenda, not quite sure that Brenda had any right here, but all the more welcome for that.

"Darling, do you come home to dinner?"

"I don't know. I could ask Mr. Florence."

They went together to Mr. Florence's desk, and he assured Tony heartily that of course she could go home to dinner; she was tired, she'd been working like a Turk couldn't one of the boys flush up the Sunday page?

Oh, no, no, no, Miss Taft would be back in about an hour, she had it all in line, there wasn't very much more to do. Tony and Brenda were hugging each other's arms with excitement and pleasure as they got into the elevator, and at the dinner table Tony was voluble about the delights of the new job.

She went back to the office through the black night with a singing heart, and the hot city room, when she reached it, with the boys lounging about, and the typewriters going, telephone bells tinkling and shouts and racket on every side seemed to her the most satisfying spot she had ever known in her life.

CHAPTER V

The nervous excitement persisted for days—for weeks. There were bad hours as well as good. Tony learned that a newspaper office, like an army camp, is a fertile place for rumors, and most of them were alarming. Almost every week there was dark talk of a complete change in management, and no reporter felt sure of himself even from day to day. And especially glib, strange, young men, or well-dressed, unknown young women, observed to be deep in talk with Greenwood, spread general apprehension. "What's he after?" the boys would ask the city editor casually when he was gone. Tony would find some excuse to drift up to his desk as soon as the woman caller disappeared. "Who is your pretty friend, Mr. Greenwood?"

She had accepted Barney's humiliating suggestions in serious earnest; she would take no chances on this job. Tony was always the first to reach the office, the most punctual with her work. She brushed her hair back sleekly and saw to it that her cuffs and collar were in trim. Over such mistakes as she made she showed so horrified a contrition that Greenwood's reproofs often turned into good-natured laughter.

There Were Bad Hours as Well as Good.

"Well, listen here: no harm done. Old Mrs. Burns Waite got mad because she hasn't ever forgiven George for marrying as he did, and you put the Georges at her big ball. Don't do it again, that's all."

Tony would go back to her desk to take out the hideous-looking old leather book and turn to the page tab marked "W." Under "Wantes" she would carefully write "Old Mrs. B. hates Georges—his wife Carolyn Petty, light opera."

She was often late at the office as autumn came on with affairs for the debutantes and the reopening of city houses, and she loved every minute of it. Aunt Meggy, assisted more often by colored Asterbel now, insisted that Tony sleep late; there was something very agreeable about awakening at nine instead of seven o'clock, and coming out to the sitting room for late coffee and blackberries and the newspaper and Aunt Meggy's contented chat. It was not only one's natural liking for ease, Tony thought; it went deeper. There was something in this changed routine that flattered her pride, that pride that had been so cruelly hurt and lowered in the long humiliating months when Tony had been the member of the family who lost jobs, was fired—couldn't help with the family's financial problem.

Now they saw, all of them, that she wasn't lazy, that she did like work! She was a professional woman now, absorbed and busy, well paid and content, and her hours deserved respect. Tony held her head higher; presently she had a new office dress of dark blue-belted, childishly simple, and a dark blue hat with a red band; Brenda told her she had never been so pretty, and she suspected that it was true.

The darkness of haunting offices going about weary and discouraged seeking jobs going home filled with hurt and resentful thoughts, was forgotten.

At ten o'clock every morning she began her rounds; perhaps a call at one of the fashionable women's clubs, perhaps a visit to some kindly society woman who had offered to help her on social news. Always she went in on her way to or from the office to see Brenda in the bookstore, busy and sweet and helpful among the books, and usually with some items gleaned from her morning's work.

From Brenda she would go to the office, where much of her copy was secured by telephone. Tony came to know that the society folk always felt it necessary to pretend that they disliked any newspaper notoriety. But if she could get it from friends or by any clever little maneuvering of her own they were pleased to be called prominent, influential, leaders exclusive; she had only to convince them thoroughly that she knew they "detested publicity to get anything she wanted.

Gathered about the supper table that was spread in daylight now, lobsters over the figs and grapes, Cliff and Brenda, Aunt Meggy and Tony agreed that this was the happiest, the most serene time they had ever known.

"We had six hellish years," said Tony. "They're over."

"Oh, they weren't hellish, darling," Brenda protested. "It was only that after Dad died we floundered for a while getting our bearings, and that of course, being in mourning for him and Mother we couldn't have much fun."

"Gosh, what a pall!" Clifford muttered, smiling consciously over his pipe.

"They were simply rotten for me," Tony persisted, darkly. "I abandon the word 'hellish' because I saw Aunt Meggy shudder, but hellish is what they were, and as hellish I shall continue to remember them!"

"Do they all make love to you down at the office?" Brenda once asked her. Tony laughed.

"That's just what they don't. They borrow quarters, and they tell me their whole histories, and they telephone other girls, right at my desk, but somehow the atmosphere of the city room is anything but romantic," she explained. "There's so much rush and confusion, we're always under such a strain—no, Joe and Vair and Spike Ilyan—they're darlings. But they don't make passes at me."

"Aunt Sally is always casting out dark suspicions of those evenings at the office."

"Aunt Sally! She thinks President Harrison is still in office!" Tony could afford to laugh at Aunt Sally. "As for her dear influential friend Augusta Terry," she told the appreciative dinner table one night, "she is a stuffed shirt!"

"Antelmette," said Miss Bruce mildly.

"You remember, she was going to help me with social notes and ask all her friends to send me in stuff? Well," Tony said. "I've telephoned her when I got into a tight place two or three times, and nothing doing. So yesterday I went up to see her and said how kind it would be of her, all that, you know. And she stiffened up like an old meerkat and said she personally had the greatest abhorrence of newspaper notoriety, and thought it most extraordinary that any girl of a nice family would ever have her name in the paper. She implied that if I were a gentlewoman I'd give up my job! To Hannibal with her!"

"And then, on the other hand," Tony presently resumed when Aunt Sally's influential friend had received the comeuppance, "on the other hand, Greeny told me to call up Linda Flood—that's Mrs. Pudding Flood—the other day. I was stuck, and he wanted me to go out on this milk investigation story, and of course I wanted to, because it's wonderful for him to give me any of the straight stories, and he said, 'Call up Linda Flood, she'll give up a lot of dope.'"

"And you don't know her?"

"I've never seen her; she's been at Tahoe all summer. So I sort of half-heartedly telephoned her and said who I was, and I heard this darling voice: 'Why, girl dear, I don't know much, but I'll give you what I have! Got a pencil?' And she began to just pour it out, what everyone was doing and dips on two engagements, and everything. And she said, 'Now you just call me up whenever you get short—I used to do that social column myself!'"

"Oh, people are lovely when they're kind," Brenda said, her eyes shining. "I'd love her!"

"Old stiff-necked parakeet of an Augusta Terry!" Tony muttered. "Afraid of herself, that's what she is. And this Mrs. Flood isn't, and that's the difference."

"I will! I love being able to do things like that," Tony said. "How a little money does help your self-respect!"

"How a little money does help your everything!" Bruce expanded it, with fervor.

"My old smart Tony. I always knew she'd make us proud of her!" Miss Bruce murmured contentedly, reaching for her solitaire cards. Tony and Brenda began to gather up the dessert dishes. They were presently talking with their own unflagging animation over the sink.

"I'd never mind this, you know, Tony, I mean not having to do the dishes—I mean, just as things are now seems richness to me," Brenda said.

"Money doesn't matter terribly," Tony conceded. "Work is the wonderful thing. To be hard working at something you simply love, and to wake up in the morning and think that here's another day's work — that's heaven."

"For a while," Brenda conceded. "But after all," she presently added thoughtfully, "no matter how successful a woman is, it seems to me she's a little lopsided if she doesn't marry."

"You say so, Brenda?"

"Well, I do."

TOOK OFF 17 LBS. OF UGLY FAT

HEEDED DOCTOR'S ADVICE

Mrs. Robert Hickey, Roseville, Calif., writes "My doctor prescribed Kruschen Salts for me—he said they wouldn't hurt me in the least. I've lost 17 lbs. in 6 weeks. Kruschen is worth its weight in gold."

Mrs. Hickey paid no attention to gossipers who said there was no safe way to reduce. She wisely followed her doctor's advice. Why don't YOU?

Get a Jar of Kruschen to-day (lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle). Simply take half teaspoonful in cup of hot water every morning. All druggists.

CORRESPONDENCE

Rev. A. A. Wall, a retired Congregational pastor of Central Lake, will preach the Christmas sermon at Grand View, Sunday, December 22.

Work at widening the Central Lake-East Jordan road is progressing quite rapidly. A number of local men have employment on the project.

Manlus McGuire is not so well again. He had been thought to be improving since he was taken suddenly ill a week ago Tuesday with a pain in the hip.

Rev. Blythe and wife, of Bear Lake, were Thanksgiving guests of the Albert Snitsler family here. They returned to Bear Lake the last of the week, where the minister is preaching.

Rev. H. H. Snider and wife were over from East Jordan last Saturday, calling on Homer Loper and family. Mrs. Snider preached a fine sermon at the Pentecostal Mission Sunday evening.

Two cars turned over on the icy road between here and Snowflake last Saturday. Luckily, no one appears to have been injured much. Auto drivers, please be careful, drive cautiously.

Miss Violet Trompour, of East Jordan, was a visitor over the week-end with Miss Eda Hill. The Trompours were one time residents of this place, moving with Mr. Walton to East Jordan.

The Gleaners held a big oyster dinner at their hall at Eastport Friday. Monday was adjustment day for Gleaner property, in a meeting to be held at Bellaire. Gleaner meetings will now be held in the daytime.

Freswell Sunday school pupils met with Mrs. McLachlan to practice their Christmas pieces this week after school. Grand View children met at the school house Saturday at 10 a. m. Turner school will meet at the school house Wednesday noon.

Miss Lenzie Morse left with Burton Russell for a visit with her daughter, Eva Peterson, in Detroit, Monday. She will be away about two weeks, stopping to visit with her mother at Lansing on her way home. Burton Russell, who has employment in Detroit, was home to attend the wedding of his sister, Lois.

The big Co-Op meeting was held at their building at Central Lake last Monday. A financial adjustment is trying to be made. It was decided, however, that the books would have to be straightened before anything could be done. Sixty-seven stockholders are in the company. Another meeting will be called in January.

Edward Dawson was home Monday the most of Monday getting feet and leg temperature up. He says that there is lots of interest in the work now. Cars are traveling over the hill the way from the power house to Ellsworth, and the road between that town and East Jordan is getting rather lumpy, although it was not in bad shape of ruts via Sat. fall.

Mrs. Lee Russell, daughter of Verdun Russell, of Three Lakes, and Marion Dodge, of Escanaba, were married by Rev. G. A. Weaver, at the Weaver residence Saturday, Thanksgiving Day. Another young couple, Arthur Stoel and Dorothy Smith, were also married on Thanksgiving Day. The wedding bells certainly did ring. Congratulations all!

The big County Pomona of Verdun county Grangers will be held at the Grand Rapids hall at Eastport next Saturday. Installation of new officers will take place, and a program will be given. Mr. and Mrs. William Blake will be installing officers, and will also give a report of the State Grange meeting, held recently. Charlevoix Grangers, come and visit with us Saturday. Potluck dinner at noon. Program afternoon.

Capt. and Mrs. Oscar Smith have moved to Grand Haven, where the former takes up his new duties with the U. S. Coast Guard Service. Until recently commander of the local station, Capt. Smith has been promoted to a higher office.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Hines, who departed last Wednesday by motor en route to Allandale, Fla., are making an indefinite stay in Detroit with their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hines, due to the illness of Mr. Hines.

Nearly eight million persons visited Michigan's 52 state parks during 1935. While this is a large figure—being approximately twice the total population of the state—it represents a drop under the state park attendance records for the previous two years.

Word has been received that Gordon Bartlett, Wayne Belding and Don McKenzie, who left here recently for Detroit, have been engaged to make a drive-away of Packard motor cars from Detroit to Los Angeles, Calif. The communication from the young men was received from a mid-western city.

All our older people will remember Miss Etha Naeler, who grew up here quite a number of years ago, resident in the Methodist parsonage. Just back from China, she will meet her old friend and give a short address at the affair at the Methodist church this Thursday evening. See church notes.

OFFER NEW CONTRACT FOR CORN AND HOGS

May Produce Normal Amount Pork But Corn Acreage Is Adjusted

The new hog contracts offered by Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, to Michigan farmers for the adjustment of the production of corn and hogs in 1936-37 are explained in a statement sent out to R. J. Baldwin, state director of the AAA at Michigan.

Farmers are not required to make any reduction in the number of hogs from their base allotment, which is the average number of hogs marketed in past years. The base which farmers have had under the present contract may be changed by action of the local committees with the consent of the State Control Board. Signers of hog contracts must produce at least 70 per cent of their allotment and may produce 100 per cent.

Corn growers may reduce their acreage as much as 35 per cent but they receive no adjustment payment for any decreases beyond 30 per cent. Payments are made on the basis of the amount of reduction up to the 30 per cent. The adjustment payment is 35 cents per bushel on the estimated yield of the adjustment acres.

Payments on hogs will be $1.25 per head for the farmer's base number. It makes no difference if he produces 50 per cent of the base number or 100 per cent. Farmers who are allotted 20 hogs will receive the adjustment payment of $25 if they meet the term of the contract by producing for market between 40 and 100 per cent of the base number. Deductions are made for under production as well as for too high production.

Farmers with an allotment of 20 acres of corn may receive payment on from 10 to 30 per cent of the acreage, depending on the actual acreage planted. At least two acres must be designated as adjustment acres and six acres may be so designated. Payments will be made on the estimated yield of the acres taken out, up to six, for the farmer with a corn allotment of 20 acres. Michigan corn yield average 30 bushels per acre and the payment is 35 cents per bushel. Good land will yield more than 30 bushels so the payments will be higher per acre on such soil.

The purpose of making no request for reductions in hog numbers and in adjusting the acreage of corn is to restore a normal balance between livestock numbers and corn available for feeding. Production of too much corn always results in a multiplication of hog numbers. Because farmers could find no way to dispose of surplus corn. The final result: to get wet production of both hogs and corn.

The 1936-37 corn hog contracts will be explained by committeemen in Michigan at local meetings. Participation in this adjustment program is entirely voluntary. Farmers should attend the meetings, hear the contracts explained, and then decide whether it will be more profitable to follow their own dictates on planting corn or raising hogs or to cooperate with farmers in this and other states to adjust production to the amounts needed for food and export.

RECIPES FOR TODAY

Christmas Entertaining

Once a person gets into the spirit of the thing, there's no time like Christmas. There's something in the air that makes the heart feel young and gay and helps you discover that after all, the world is a pretty good place to live! To help this holiday time at its gay height, there are parties for the "youngsters," "oldsters" and "not-so-old-sters." So I am giving you a few ideas for the trickiest of appetizers and holiday canapes. I hope you'll try them, because I know you'll like them!

My definition of an appetizer is a small portion of highly seasoned or flavored food, served hot or cold at the beginning of a meal. It may be served at the table or in the living room. You'll find these bacon rolls are something that will make any party gayer. To eat them easier, stick with a toothpick and if you have one of those clever wooden pegs, he will make a splendid server for these pick-ups.

Stuffed Bacon Rolls

2 teaspoons chopped parsley, 2 cups soft bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon minced onion, ¾ cup chopped cooking apples, ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, 1 egg, ¼ cup milk, 8 slices bacon.

Combine all ingredients except bacon. Divide into 16 portions and shape into small rolls. Cut each slice of bacon in half crosswise and wrap a half slice around each roll. Secure with toothpicks. Bake in moderate oven, 375 degrees F. for 35 minutes, or until bacon is cooked and brown.

Small pork sausages are another tricky toothpick appetizer. Merely fry them a golden brown. Also to whet the appetite, celery stuffed with equal proportions of pimento cheese and peanut butter proves a delicious novelty, and stuffed hard-cooked eggs are always appreciated by the connoisseur of appetizers. Just boil the eggs hard, cut in half, and carefully remove the yolk. Mash this and combine with an equal amount of sandwich spread. Refill and chill. Sprinkle with paprika before serving.

Now for the canapes! There are so many kinds that can be made, were I to try to tell you about even half of them, it would take me from now until doomsday. The best suggestion I can make is that you have plenty of soft, fine-textured bread. I stress this because successful canapes depend on the bread you use. It must have a fine, velvety texture so that it will cut evenly and toast uniformly to a golden brown. Also, if you order unsliced bread from your grocer, you will find that it will work up much nicer. You will also need a very sharp knife, a handful of cookie cutters, and then just open the refrigerator and cupboard and collect everything you have in the way of spreads and garnishes and go to it! I'm giving you several of my favorite Christmas canape recipes, and if you would like others, send your request to Alice Hale Kent, Chief Dietitian and Home Economics Authority, Michigan Bakeries, Inc., Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Pimietta Canape

Cut thinly sliced white bread with a tin shaped cutter. Toast one side. Spread untoasted side with buttery flavored sandwich spread. Put in place thin strip of pimento, cut about from center to all point of the star. Chill.

Wreath Canape

Slice white bread thin. Cut into circle with doughnut cutter. Toast lightly on one side and spread untoasted side with cream cheese mixed with minced onion. Decorate two edges with chopped parsley, and use small circle of pimento around inside for holly berries. Chill.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

"Helping Your Child Be His Best" Project Started

The latest activity of interest to farm and city women is the project "Helping Your Child Be His Best." As the title indicates, the subject matter to be presented deals entirely with children, their development, their reactions, their emotions, and their problems. All interested parents in the county are cordially invited to participate, and who isn't interested in children?

The first meetings were held at Charlevoix December 4, and at East Jordan on December 5. The topic discussion was open to the general public, and as per usual planted money Mrs. Lynch gave a highly interesting review of the subject to be studied. The next lesson will be on the subject "Your Child's Curiosity," the second on "Developing Self Reliance," and the third on "The Child's Play," and the last on "Sex Hygiene."

In order for parents to participate in this program it is necessary to organize small study groups who will send two leaders to a representative to the leaders' training center. These two leaders then will present the subject matter to their own group, following each of the next three discussions. A group must consist of at least eight members. A good group is one that may include five or six couples. The second lesson will be on January 2, the third on January 30, the fourth on March 5, and the last on April 1 and 2.

We are hopeful that 15 to 20 groups will become interested in this project. It should not be difficult for a person anxious to participate in this activity, to see friends and neighbors and organize themselves. If anyone desires assistance in organizing their community, drop a line to your agent in Boyne City.

Highest Honors In State Hort Show Won by Northern Michigan Exhibitors

If there is any doubt that good apples can not be raised in this area, it was well demonstrated at the State Hort Show that such is not the case. Especially was it proved that McIntosh cannot be raised elsewhere in the state as well as in this locality. In fact, D. D. Tibbits and H. C. Waring actually stole the show, and the McIntosh, was to people.

In the keenest competition of the entire show, Tibbits won the sweepstakes award on his plate of McIntosh when he competed with some 800 plates. In addition to this most coveted award, he won one first, three seconds, and one third place in ten box, and the Northern Spy won the first place. In trays, his sample of Wealthies placed first in addition to having one second place, one third, and one fourth. In the Ten Plate Class, his samples of Spys and McIntoss, placed second. In the single plate class he was awarded first with Northern Spy, McIntosh, Wealthy and Snow. Picking up two seconds, two thirds, and two fourths, winning a total of $65.50 in premiums in Northern Michigan's greatest apple show, is no small accomplishment.

Homer G. Waring, of Kewadin, won approximately the same amount of premium money, and included in his winnings the sweepstakes tray, sweepstakes bushel, and first in a class of three tray, as well as first in collection of 40 apples, and best 10 plates.

Health Examination Prolongs Span of Life

After the age of 30 every man and woman should have a yearly physical examination. Frequent examinations are needed before that age, but it is all important that the check-up should be an annual affair after 30. It is the degenerative group of diseases that the adult has to fear most, and the body is in need of frequent overhauling to discover the first symptoms of a possible break.

Prevention is better than a cure. We all believe prevention best. We all preach it for we like to tell others what they should do; but it is quite another matter to practice what we preach. In this respect our health departments are meeting with wonderful success. Thus, on a co-operative basis, we are doing more than preaching. We are preventing. Health departments save many lives every year in the community by preventing disease. But there is a limit to what health departments can do. When it comes to building up and maintaining a strong, vigorous body machine it is up to each of us to conduct health departments of our own in personal hygiene. An annual health examination is the means of giving us an inventory of ourselves on which to build.

The examination determines the extent to which the individual is free to be well to the optimum and to improve health to the maximum. As a result the individual is either assured that his health is normal, or the discovery is made of potential or actual defects. With the assurance that the health is normal the individual has only to continue living intelligently to maintain the state of good health. With the discovery of defects, ways and means must be provided for remedying or minimizing the defects in order not to impair appreciably the efficiency of the individual.

The periodic health examination in schools is a great boon, and where it is not offered or where it is poorly carried out, the chief causes are a lack of funds or a lack of facilities. Adults who pay attention to the finding of health examinations in schools could profit thereby if they would apply the lesson to themselves. Since in children there are found so many and diverse defects, what about adults? In many cases defects have been allowed to pass unnoticed for year without suspicion of anything wrong until the defect has led to heart disease or some other serious ailment. The health examination, if thorough, discovers the defect while the correction of the defect often prevents the surrender of the body to a degenerative disease.

Gum-Dipping makes the cord body more flexible, tougher and stronger. Leading race drivers, who know tires, will not risk their lives on any other make.

Few car owners fully realize the danger in driving on unsafe tires at today's high speeds. Last year 43,000 accidents were caused by blowouts, punctures and skidding. Don't take chances! UPPER COUNTIES HUNT RABBITS UNTIL JAN. 31

Season Closes January 1 for Counties Below Townline 16

[illegible] and nowhere about Lacey in the southern half of Michigan's lower Peninsula has little more than two weeks left in which to hunt the cottontail.

The open season now covers the lower half of the southern peninsula this year, due to a change in hunting regulations by the State Conservation Commission.

Under present regulations all counties south of Townline 16 including all of Huron county are closed to rabbit hunting after January 1. Townline 16 crosses the Lower Peninsula at a point north of Pentwater from Lake Michigan to Saginaw Bay. It is the south line of Mason, Lake, Oscoda, Clare and Gladwin counties.

In all the rest of Michigan north of Townline 16, the rabbit-hunting season remains open to and including January 31.

To summarize, the regulations provide the following: A longer open season on rabbits in that portion of the state which has both snowshoe and cottontail and where snow hare rabbits are most abundant, a shorter open season in that portion which is principally cottontail territory and where the supply is relatively limited.

PLANTS MAKE HOME MUCH MORE CHEERFUL

Winter Gardeners Will Be Successful If Proper Care Is Given Flowers

"Most homemakers really enjoy beautiful plants but the belief that it is difficult to grow them to have them indoors prevents many homes from having these natural decorations, according to the horticultural department at Michigan State College.

Plants have certain natural requirement which are more difficult to supply indoors than outside but many plants can be grown successfully in the house. All plants require light, heat, moisture, and air, and the amounts needed vary with the different species of plants. All flowering plants need more sunlight than do the foliage plants.

Geraniums, begonias, and roses thrive best in a south window but ferns, vines, or palms make the best growth in an east or west window. North windows admit too little light for the best results with house plants.

Lack of moisture in the air is one of the chief difficulties of growing plants in a dwelling house. The moisture can be supplied by spraying the foliage of plants twice daily with water. Shallow metal trays in which the flower pots are placed on a layer of pebbles covered with water also aid in supplying additional water. The soil around the plant should never be allowed to become thoroughly dry.

Too much water around the plant's root prevents the absorption of air and slowly kill the plant. Some plants such as cacti and euphorbias require very little water but ferns need a great deal. Provision must be made for the draining of the excess water in pots in which plants have been. Water evaporates faster from earthen containers than from wooden boxes. Rain water is better than well water for plants. Plants should be watered when the surface of the soil becomes dry and enough water should be used that water drains from the bottom of the container.

Most common plants will thrive in temperatures ranging from 50 degrees Fahrenheit at night to 68 degrees in the day time. The primrose, cineraria, hydrangea, and cyclamen grow best at lower temperatures. Plants placed near windows must be protected on cold night by drawing the curtains or by covering of paper.

The best container for house plants is the common, porous clay pot. Painted or glazed earthenware is impervious to air. Pots which are too large usually retain enough excess water so the soil becomes sour. Yellow foliage on a plant is often an indication that the container is too small that the roots are crowded and are not able to develop properly. Such plants should be transferred to a larger pot.

LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

By Lois L. Bedwin

We had a nice attendance at the special social meeting Monday evening and accomplished much more with our sewing than we expected. Elizabeth Reinhart surprised us with a delightful treat which we all enjoyed while we were sewing. The boys seem to be very curious as to just what we are making. We hope that when we spread our potluck lunch at the joint Christmas party December 19th they will then be very careful not to spill their coffee on what we have made.

Monday evening, December 16th, the auxiliary will meet at the home of Sarah Sternberg, 109 West Upright avenue, for our Christmas party. Lots of fun is anticipated as these Christmas parties are always full of holiday cheer. All members are urged to be present and bring their friends as it is a surprise on Sarah. Donations of popper corn, pop corn balls, peanut and candy will be appreciated as there was no opportunity to form a committee for that evening. Each person attending the party is requested to bring a 10 cent gift. Names will be drawn and the gift given to the person whose name is drawn. Plan will also be made that evening for filling candy boxes for the children for Christmas. Six hundred boxes will be filled as usual and it must be done prior to December 21st, so they may be passed out to the children on that date.

Thursday evening, December 19th, the Legion and Girl Scouts troops will meet at the Legion hall for their get together Christmas party. There will be a potluck and what each lady shall bring will be decided upon at the party December 16th. All we know at present is that every one attending the party is requested to bring their own plate, cup and silver to eliminate dish washing at the hall. Let's all turn out and make it the biggest and best Christmas party we have ever held.

LEGION ACTIVITIES

By F. V. Tyler

The annual Legion Christmas children's party at the Legion Home on East Garfield avenue will be held Saturday, December 21st, at 1 p. m. The local squadron of the Sons of the American Legion will probably receive its charter on or about the first of the new year. The squadron has recently been divided into three groups, classified according to the ages of the members.

ANNOUNCE PLANS FOR ANNUAL CHARITY BALL

Second Annual Holiday Party to Be Held December 30 at Gym

Plans for the second annual Holiday Charity Ball, to be held Monday evening, December 30, at the gymnasium, are being made by a large group representing the Parent-Teacher Association.

Last year through the efforts of a similar group, a very successful party was held. The purpose is primarily to provide a party at the time of year when many former students and friends are home for the holidays. Proceed realized from the affair will be used in the school feeding project.

The decorations, as last year, will be appropriate to the Yuletide season. No invitations will be issued, thus eliminating a tendency to classify the event as too formal. All are invited.

Dr. and Mrs. Carleton Dean, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Edwards, are acting as general chairmen. Other committees are: Tickets, Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Levinsen; publicity, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. North; decorating, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Webster, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Cooper, Harry F. Bingham, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. Onsley Hammond, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Kobler, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Emrey; refreshments, E. J. Edwards and Clarence Wood; music, Mrs. Mary Cooper.

KIDDIES XMAS PROGRAM IS SATURDAY

FREE MOVIES PROVIDED AT PALACE THEATRE

Santa Claus Will Distribute Gift Candy Bags at American Legion Home—Carol Singers

Saturday, December 21st, will be a big day for the kiddies of Charlevoix and adjoining rural districts if plan prepared for their entertainment may be taken as an indication.

First and most important of all is the fact that Old Santa Claus will be present to assist in the entertainment features. Santa will put in his first appearance at the American Legion Home, on Garfield avenue, where he is scheduled to distribute bags of candy and nuts to the children. This event will take place at around 1 o'clock.

The next big event of the afternoon will be at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Elizabeth Moon, manager of the Palace Theatre, is providing a free movie for all children under the age of 12 years. It is understood Santa Claus will be present at the theatre.

In the evening Santa will lead a group of singers, who will go through the streets singing Christmas carols the same as was done many years ago in France, England and Germany. The homes of the sick and shut-ins will be visited by the carol singers.

The festive decorations of the Yuletide season are much in evidence in Charlevoix this year, and are aiding to provide a genuine Christmas atmosphere. The street decorations are worthy of comment. Many private homes have this year arranged outdoor Christmas decorations.

WINTER SPORTS CLUB IS FORMED

OFFICERS ELECTED AT MEETING THURSDAY NIGHT

Will Choose Queen for Reginal Competition—Plan Membership Drive, Program of Activities

This city launched a campaign to renew interest in winter sports with the formation of the Charlevoix Polar Bears Winter Sports Club at a meeting of business men and enthusiasts Thursday evening at the council chambers.

With a representative gathering present, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Archie I. Livingston; vice-president, Edward J. Edwards; secretary, Dean Davenport; treasurer, Engle VanAllsburg.

Among the first activities of the newly-formed club will be the selection of a candidate to represent this city in the competition for Michigan Winter Queen at Petoskey, January 11. Several will be asked to compete in the local competition which will result in selection of the representative at Petoskey. It was proposed that a committee of three judge make the selection at a date yet to be named.

The Winter Queen committee is composed of Freda McMillan, Harry E. Bingham, Mrs. V. J. Stelter, H. A. Craig, O. P. North, Mrs. Mildred Webster and Mrs. Ruth Ann Dowd.

Another early activity will be a membership campaign. Polar Bear insignias will be issued with each paid membership. The fee for adults was set at 50 cents, and for children 10 cents. The membership committee is composed of Bill Fessenden, F. V. Tyler, S. O. Sorenson, Leroy Zelley, C. B. Meggison, Frank F. Bird and Charles Hamlin.

It is proposed to hold a program of skating and skiing events weekly to develop local talent for competition in regional winter sports events. At least a one-day program of sports events will be staged late in January. The Club favorably considered affiliation with the Michigan Skating Association.

Other committees were appointed to be in charge of the following activities: Publicity, reception, ice boating, coasting, emblem, decorations, entertainment, skiing, fancy skating and speed skating.

The Club will meet again in the near future at the call of the president to complete plans for contemplated activities.

Skating will soon be available, it is anticipated, with the approval a WPA recreational project of the municipal skating rink at the school grounds. Favorable weather is now awaited to start the rink construction.

Formation of a winter sports club in this city, the first Northern Michigan community to sponsor winter sports, was the result of a recent regional winter sports meeting held at Petoskey.

PREPARE FOR RE-SURFACING ON M-66

14 MILES OF IMPROVEMENT NOW UNDER WAY

Oil Aggregate Surface From East Jordan to South City Limits of Charlevoix Planned

Due primarily to the ultimate benefit this city will derive, Charlevoix residents are watching with interest the progress of work on the improvement of 14 miles on M-66 from the intersection of the East Jordan-Ellsworth road north to the south city limits of Charlevoix.

The project, sponsored through the WPA by the State Highway Department, is now employing 61 men and soon will absorb the total of 96 required. The work consists of grading widening to 36 feet, eliminating curves, drainage, etc., in preparation for oil aggregate surface. Treatment of the gravel base with the surfacing of oil aggregate cannot get under way until next spring, it is understood. In the meantime, however, workers are preparing the road for this surfacing. The gravel to be used in the oil aggregate mix will be produced by workers during the winter.

The project is being carried out under State Highway Department specifications. Charles H. Helmer, of Cadillac, is the highway department superintendent in charge. George Caldwell and Clarence Bierline, of East Jordan, are foremen on the job.

It is understood there is a probability of relocating a part of the route, although no official announcement has been made. There are several bad corners north from the George Hanson farm to Ironton which may be eliminated, depending, it is understood, upon the provision of new right-of-way.

Work has been progressing rapidly since the project was started, promising readiness for surfacing when weather conditions permit in the spring.

Present "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," December 26th

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," the subtitle of which is "I Will Seek Thy God," will be presented under auspices of the Methodist Literary and Sewing Club, and direction of Ruth Anne Dowd, Thursday evening, December 26th.

This fanta-sy-drama is especially appropriate for Christmas week, since it deals with the transforming power of the Spirit of Christ upon the lives of men.

The members are: Freda McMillan, Marie Walter, Archie Bebling, Ivo Howe, Marguerite Chew, Alden McMillan, Lloyd Arnold, Ernestine Chew, Leslie Shapton, Dorothy Staley, Harold Chew and Rev. Isaac Scherpenisse, who portrays the part of The Stranger, who represents the Spirit of Christ.

The play will be presented in the auditorium of the Methodist church with special setting and lighting effects which will enhance the symbolic meaning of the drama.

MAKE BANK PAY-OFF HERE DECEMBER 21

OVER $20,000 OF IMPOUNDED FUNDS WILL BE RELEASED

Over 500 Holders Certificates of Participation In Old County Bank Get 10 Per Cent Dividend

Providing the most important financial news in recent months is the announcement that a 10 per cent dividend will be released on December 21 to holders of certificates of participation in the segregated assets of the old Charlevoix County Bank.

Notices have been mailed to over 500 certificate holders by Alice R. Miller, secretary for the trustees, instructing that certificates be presented either in person or by mail, at the Charlevoix County State Bank on or after December 21.

The dividend, coming at the height of the Christmas season, will release approximately $20,000 into the business channels of this community.

In making the announcement to the public, Robert Bridge, president of the Charlevoix County State Bank, reorganized in February of 1934, stated that payment of the dividend at this time has been made possible for the reason that earnings of the new bank since reorganization have been turned over to the trustees of the segregated assets of the old County Bank to assist in making the pay-off.

Those who have money in the segregated assets will receive their dividend by presenting certificates of participation at the Charlevoix County State Bank on or after the date designated.

WPA FUNDS HELP TO LURE TOURIST

ENTERTAINMENT FACILITIES OF STATE EXPANDED

Charlevoix Recreational Field and Municipal Dock Are Among Many Northern Michigan Projects

Thousands of Michigan's former welfare recipients, backed by federal funds made available by the Works Progress Administration, are grooming the northern part of the state for its greatest bid for leadership in the nation's tourist industry.

The greatest portion of $8,000,000 being spent on 125 WPA projects now under way in the Upper Peninsula and the northern most counties of Lower Michigan.

The project are to be completed next year. They are expected to make Michigan one of the foremost playgrounds of the world by offering attraction such a the world's highest ski jump, highways pre cutting some of the nation's most scenic views and many new famous historically.

In addition Michigan will offer a paradise for trout and pike fishermen. Fish conservations, extensive hunting grounds and adequate means of game cover with a maximum of protection against fire hazards, are all part of the program.

Approximately 200 WPA workers are at work on a scenic drive to the top of Roosevelt Mountain. From the uppermost section of this highway tourist will be able to view the country for a distance of 60 miles. At Iron Mountain, the world's largest ski jump is now under contruction.

The closing of the copper mines forced 79 per cent of Keweenaw county's population to seek aid from local or federal welfare agencies. The WPA has assigned a large portion of this group to work on fur log cabins scattered in place convenient to highways and town markets throughout the copper country where travelers may live in comfort.

Cabins

Some of the cabins will be constructed in cluster to represent Finnish villages. Each of them will be provided with a central store, where souvenirs and handicraft made by workers during the winter months will be sold. The stores will be operated by Finns, attired in their native costumes.

New fish hatcheries at Iron Mountain, Cooks Run and in Delta county will serve as show places as well as increasing the supply of trout and pike in lakes throughout the area. Plans are under way for a new road which will make the almost impenetrable hunting and fishing grounds in the northeast corner of Oscoda county readily accessible.

A conservation program for the reduction of fire hazards and improvement of game cover is underway in Ogemaw county. Tower men who formerly have been idle during the winter months are serving as foremen of WPA work crews.

Reconstruction operations are under way at old Fort Holmes on Mackinac Island. When the rejuvenation is completed the historic stronghold will present almost the same appearance it did in late years of the 18th century, when it was a British possession.

SALES TAX RECEIPTS SHOW BIG INCREASE

Sales tax collections in Michigan for November will exceed figures for the same month last year by approximately 30 per cent, Joseph S. Fenelon, director of the State Tax Board, estimates.

The tax director said $3,635,083 had been collected from this source up to November 27 and that amount was $769,815 more than was derived from the sales tax for the month of November, 1934.

Fenelon reported the November collection have already surpassed the October revenue. He announced last month's figure was $3,502,777.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

Lack Traffic Data From Rural Areas

"Operation of the secretary of state's central violations file during the two weeks following its installation, November 22, has shown that cooperation thus far has come almost entirely from police, prosecutors and court officials in the state's largest cities. Appreciation of the ultimate value of the file is lacking in small centers and rural areas, a survey shows.

The central violations file is one in which the complete driving history of every motorist in the state who comes afoul of traffic laws of any kind, is to be kept. The proper officials throughout the state were furnished with blanks on which every conviction of any kind pertaining to traffic law or ordinance violation is to be forwarded to the secretary of state. If courts or officers are not supplied with forms, the secretary of state will forward a supply. During the first two weeks operation of the file, reports came in at the rate of about 250 a week. Half of these were from Detroit; virtually the entire balance was from the other large cities of the state.

Long before the scope of the file was expanded, thousands of accident reports from the Michigan State Police had already been filed against the records of drivers. Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, wants the complete violation history of every motorist so that judgment may be exercised in passing on applications for renewal of drivers' licenses.

Within a short time, all officials in Michigan from whom reports are lagging, will receive a letter from the Department of State in which some reason will be sought for the lack of cooperation in the current long-range move to ultimately bar the "accident breeder" from the streets and highways of the state.

The teen age has less judgment, more temptation, and less self-control.

TWELVE MILLION NETTED IN TAX CAMPAIGN

Charlevoix County Received $32,286 In Delinquent Taxes

Delinquent taxes collected a the result of the state's $75,000 "save your home advertising campaign," amounted to $12,110,669, Auditor General John J. O'Hara announced today in a report prepared for the State Administrative Board.

Collections in August, 1934, were $2,696,706.

Of the amount received, $5,122,535 was in payments on the 10 year tax payment plan.

In his report O'Hara said, "It is still possible for delinquent taxpayers to clear their accounts in full on the 10 year plan before the public sale next May."

Expenditures amounted to $75,757.51, an emergency appropriation by the Administrative Board. The bulk of the amount was spent in newspaper advertising, including $23,952 in dailies and $22,569 in weeklies.

"Results greatly exceeded anticipations, so much so that it has taken many weeks for some counties to consolidate their returns, issue necessary receipts and make reports," O'Hara said.

Alpena, $27,712; Antrim, $27,363; Charlevoix, $32,286; Cheboygan, $12,612; Emmet, $36,683; Grand Traverse, $54,639; Kalkaska, $13,236; Kent, $200,000 (estimated); Manistee, $40,000 (estimated); Mason, $43,111; Mecosta, $42,000 (estimated); Muskegon, $375,903; Wayne, $3,991,592 (August and September); Wexford, $31,563.

ISSUE SAFETY STICKERS WITH 1936 PLATES

Motorist to Be Asked to Sign Pledge In State-Wide Campaign

Safe-driving pledges and windshield stickers of the State Safety Council, bearing the words "I Drive Safely," are to be made available at all branches of the State Department.

When an applicant buys his 1936 plate he will be asked to help in Michigan's year-round safety drive by putting his name to a pledge and by committing himself thus over his own signature to a program of intelligent operation.

If he does not wish to sign such a pledge but will agree verbally to use care on the roads, a windshield sticker will be furnished him along with his number plates.

The State Department of Public Instruction is to distribute pledges and stickers in a Lansing high school, with the thought of extending distribution to high school students throughout the state if interest in Lansing proves the merit of the plan.

Every automobile and truck in state service will don stickers next week and Public Works Commissioner Laurence G. Lenhardt, of Detroit, has asked for a supply of the gummed pledges for all city-owned cars.

Flint expects to distribute 35,000 pledges and stickers through its schools. Teachers will give safe-driving pledge to each pupil to take home to parents. When signed, the pledge will be returned to the teacher, who then will turn over the windshield seal to the pupil to take home to the family.

A million state stickers will be on cars by January 15, it is estimated.

OCTOBER GAME LAW VIOLATIONS A HIGH RECORD

New and effective methods of organization and enforcement gave Michigan an all-time high record in conservation law enforcement this year for the month of October.

The total of convictions obtained was 655. This exceeds by 71 the highest previous October total, set in 1930. Pheasant law arrests alone aggregated almost 200 for October this year.

FORBID CUTTING TREES ON STATE-OWNED LANDS

Conservation Department Warns the Public Seeking Xmas Trees

The cutting of Christmas trees on state forest areas and other state-owned lands is not permitted by the Department of Conservation although numerous requests are received each year for permission to remove trees for use or sale.

The policy of the Department of Conservation for many years has been against the cutting of trees on state lands for Christmas tree purposes.

Individuals who cut young spruce, balsam, pine or cedar trees on lands held by the state may be charged with trespass and subjected to prosecution.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS
By Ann Page

* * * * * * * * * * * *

New crop vegetables have begun to be harvested in Florida, California and Texas, three states which supply winter vegetables to the rest of the country. Naturally this produce costs more than home-grown stuff but is reasonable in most instances. A frost in Florida hit the string beans pretty badly so that they are high this year much as they were last.

Tangerines, oranges and grapefruit are abundant and low in price. Meats, fish and poultry continue firm. Egg prices have apparently passed their high peak while wholesale butter prices are still rising.

Fruit, vegetable, fish and dairy food prices at this season are largely dependent on weather conditions.

FREIGHT TRAFFIC SOO LOCKS SHOWS INCREASE

Total freight passing through the Soo locks until December 1 is on record as 17,853,191 tons as compared with 41,958,161 tons over the same period last year.

CHEVROLET NOVEMBER PRODUCTION INCREASE

60,000 More Cars Produced Than For Any Previous November

Chevrolet Motor Co. today reported a production total of 108,876 units in November, exceeding the previous record for any November in the history of the company by more than 60,000. The extraordinary increase in a period that heretofore has been one of the industry's low-production months is credited by the company to the effect of this year's introduction of new models in November, instead of in January, as has been the practice.

Besides breaking all November records, last month's total of 108,876 units also exceeds by more than 17,000 units the highest January record in Chevrolet history, thus setting a new high total for the first month's production of newly introduced models.

Reports from dealers so far received are sufficient to indicate that November will set a new record in retail sales by a large margin.

CONSERVATION DEPT. FAVORS INLAND ROUTE

Find Dredging Would Not Damage Fishing or Water Levels

Little damage, if any, would result to lake levels or potential fish supplies by the proposed reopening of the inland waterway for motorboats and yachts across the northern tip of the Lower Peninsula, believes a committee of Department of Conservation officials.

The route originally was opened by the United State War Department in 1876 and 1877 as an accommodation to resorters and residents of the area, but since has become filled with sand, logs, brush and other debris. Starting at Pickerel Lake, north of Petoskey, it ran through Crooked Lake, Crooked River, Burt Lake, Indian River, Mullet Lake, Cheboygan River and to Lake Huron, a distance of 30 miles.

A public hearing conducted by engineers of the War Department at Alanson, Emmet county, to consider requests for re-opening of the channel, was attended by a committee of Department of Conservation men consisting of Fred A. Westerman, chief of the Fisheries Division, R. A. Smith, state geologist, and Wayland Osgood, of the Geology Division.

A report submitted by the committee states that when the original channel was deepened no known damage resulted and that the proposed re-opening with any necessary dredging would be injurious neither to water levels nor to potential fish supplies.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Few people realize the extent to which the State of Michigan is in the business of publishing books. In the execution of his duties as provided by law, Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, is the capitol's chief publisher of books, pamphlets and other public records.

Publication of the "Michigan Manual" and the Public Acts of each session of the Legislature, is a matter of routine for the Department of State, and has been for years. Because of this, the immensity of the projects often escapes notice.

Interesting figures are drawn from the most recent publication of the State Department the 1935 "Michigan Manual," the bound red book which has been a familiar symbol of state record for many years.

There were 15,000 copies of the Manual printed, to be sold to the public at cost, of $1.50 a volume. Several thousand of the books are distributed to public officials without cost; the total cost to the state is about $23,000 for the printing, binding and engraving. The entire consignment, weighing approximately one and one-half pounds per volume, would tip the beams at 11½ tons. Most of them are shipped out of Lansing and at state expense, too.

With each book being one and three-fourths inches thick, they would form a pile of 2,187 feet, or almost half a mile, if the 15,000 books were stacked one on top of another. The pages, measuring nine by six inches, with some 850 to a volume, have a total area of 1,781,236 square feet, or almost 110 acres.

Nor is the Manual the largest publishing project the State Department tackles. Every 10 years the laws of the state are compiled. The last compilation was published in 1929. Each set is of four volumes, each one of which is twice the size of any Manual. Twenty thousand sets of The Compiled Acts of 1929 were printed, making 80,000 giant books for the printing and binding project.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM AT BARNARD CHURCH

Play, "The Christmas Story," to Be Given Next Tuesday Evening

Announcement has been made of a Christmas program to be given Tuesday evening, December 24th, at the South Barnard Reformed church. The program will be centered around the play, "The Christmas Story," depicting in four scenes the birth of the Christ-child and the message of the star. The cast includes about 20 characters under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Lane Scherpenisse.

Musical numbers will be furnished by members of the Sunday school. The program starts at 7:30 o'clock.

DICKENS STUDY CLUB HELD ENJOYABLE CHRISTMAS PARTY ON MONDAY AFTERNOON

The house was tastefully decorated with evergreens and Christmas motifs on the tables, and the dining room was done in red and white. Mrs. Ethel Dudley, assisted by Mrs. Ora Dean, had charge of the refreshments, which were served from a table decorated with Christmas candles. Mrs. Mayer was assisted by Mrs. Alta Magor, Mrs. Gladys Dean, Marion Pachtrider, Abby Lou Isabelle Swafford and Miss Minnie Payton.

"I Came Upon a Midnight Clear" and "O Holy Night, Holy Night," duets by Mrs. Vera Dean and Mrs. Alta Magor, accompanied by Mrs. Vera Mayer, "Book of the Holly Tree" by Charles Dickens, read by Mrs. Marion Pachtrider, "Marche Slave," by Peter Tschaikowsky, and "Ish-Ka-Bibble and Her Kitten," by Mrs. Ella Fuehtman, were the musical numbers on the program.

Mrs. Ella Fuehtman will be hostess to the club at the next meeting, January 6th.

After the program, members were invited to the very attractive dining room, where tea was served at a table artistically appointed. Mrs. Gladys Dean and Mrs. Alta Magor served.

The Christmas spirit was enjoyed the more because of the fact that at the business meeting $12 was voted as a contribution to the milk fund of the public schools, and a silver offering amounting to five dollars was taken for the Christmas fund for the children of the community.

BAPTIST CHURCH
W. H. Rauch, Pastor

Christmas is just a mirror. In it we see the glory of God. For centuries the world had been looking up to see God and had grown weary looking, and then God came down to earth and was born in Bethlehem as a child, and in Jesus we look into the very face of God. Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." They called His name, Emmanuel, the mighty God, the Everlasting Father.

Next Sunday, in every service the Christmas spirit will be felt.

At the morning worship, the choir will give several selections of Christmas music. The pastor will bring the Christmas message. Time, 10:30.

Sunday school, 11:45.

Evening worship 7:30. The service will be given over to the children, who will give a Christmas entertainment.

Joyous Christmas to all!

"I mean," Brenda insisted, "that there are different sorts of women. I like men tremendously—I think I'm easier with them than you are. But when it comes to getting quite close to one, going in for all the murmuring and intimacy and the loving part—all that, it simply doesn't register. It makes me feel uncomfortable. I have heavenly times, going down to Carmel with Alison and the Beattys; we're completely happy. We cook, and talk books, and go uptown and get things for supper in the back garden; I don't miss anything."

"I don't miss anything, now," Tony said. "I'm completely happy."

Brenda, even while she shook her head, knew that it was true; in finding her work Tony had found herself, and quite unexpectedly liked what she discovered. She seemed to grow taller and slimmer as the months went by; all the qualities that had made Brenda and Aunt Meggy uneasy about her disappeared as if by magic; she was groomed, energetic, purposeful.

Every night she came home to them with tales of her adventures. When Tony told of the scene that restored the little lost Jenson boy to his mother and father, Aunt Meggy had to wipe her eyes; she sketched every separate entity on the big Call staff for their benefit, and they felt that they knew good-natured, pompous little Greeny, and stern handsome Mr. Fitch, and all the boys of the city room, as she did.

Lazy, unwashed, yawning little Arch Slosser continued to occupy the desk next to Tony's, and helped her generously even when he would not do his own work. Spike Hivan came in from the sports department to ask her about the clothes the women had worn to the tennis tournament. Joe Burke assumed the affectionate attitude of an old friend, promising to take her to a fight some night. Ami Van Fleet once told her about his wife's tuberculosis. All of them liked her, and she liked them all and regretted that they were so often a little leary from their too convivial dinners, and in so constant a state of being fired and reemployed, warned and scolded by Greeny, who was himself a heavy drinker.

Patty Perkins she did not like, but there was a friendly, ranee big woman who "covered Oakland," and who was confidential and friendly with Tony, and there was kindly old Mrs. Maginis who tottered in to do a weekly editorial headed "A Kiss for Everyone's Mother on Mother's Day" or "Baby Annie's Little Hands Keep Daddy Safe and Sane." If there were any event, local or national, with a mother, baby, an old soldier or old song anywhere involved, Mrs. Maginis, who signed "Betsy Ross" pounced hungrily upon it; she often wept when she told Tony what she was writing, sentimentally describing herself as the most beloved and useful newspaper woman in the world.

The only other woman on the staff was a blonde named Bess Cutler who was paid a hundred dollars a week for a column called "Bessie Saw It." No one in the city office was supposed to know why Gavin Franklin Fitch, general manager, felt justified in paying Miss Cutler so generously for the queer tangled notes she occasionally brought in and that, if indeed they were usable at all, someone in the office always had to put into shape for her, but everyone did know that she had an apartment on Pine street, where Mr. Fitch dined almost every night and that Mrs. Fitch often had to be told, when she telephoned in meekly to ask where he was, that he had to go to Fresno or Sacramento.

Tony and Bessie got on well together, and after a while it became the custom for Tony to do a great part of Bessie's work. The older woman—she was well into the thirties—would tumble all sorts of little notes upon Tony's desk and look with pathetic confidence at Tony while they were discussed.

That Mr. Fitch, who was all-powerful and much feared, was aware of her kindly assistance to the methodical Bessie she knew when he stopped on an assignment and put a new ticket book on her desk.

"Read that?"

"I thought you might enjoy it." He hesitated, his face rather red. It was a quiet morning hour in the city room, and nobody was within sound of their voices. "Everything comfortable for you in here, Miss Taft?"

"Oh, wonderful!"

"We want you to feel at home, that anything you don't like can be changed," he said stiffly, but with what for him was rare graciousness. Tony sat fingering the book, staring after him, when he went away. This was gratifying, reassuring, as far as the precious job was concerned; there was no one in the office, Greeny included, who would not have given a week's pay for so much from Mr. Fitch. But she saw breakers ahead. Her face flushed, her eyes shining, she sat lost in uncomfortable thought for a long time.

CHAPTER VI

"Listen, ever seen Ina Strawbridge the actress, you know? She's coming out in her big New York success this summer. Ever see her?" Bessie Cutter asked her a few days later. Tony was conscious of fear, beating like a drum, deep in her heart.

"No, I haven't."

"She's coming next month. I adore her," Bessie said. "Ever have dinner at Olivier's?"

"The French place on Bush street? —O God, get me out of this," Tony prayed.

"Although really," Bessie said, as on second thought, "really my Chinese boy, Pete Lee, serves a better dinner than they do. Only it's a little more exciting downtown. I'll tell you—when Ina's here, let's ask Joe Burke or someone and have a party. What do you say?"

"I'd love it," Tony agreed cordially. But she went home rather somberly a little while later. Working like mad on a newspaper, putting up with insults and snubs on some days, suffering tired and cold and hungry and missing one's story after all getting "scooped," getting call-downs from Greeny all that was fair. But the sickish feeling in her heart when she thought of a dinner and the theater with handsome Mr. Fitch and Bessie was something else again.

She dared not ask Brenda or Aunt Meggy about it; she meditated asking Cliff. But Cliff was a peculiarly quiet, slow-going person, not unsophisticated exactly, not ignorant, but so far removed in his own tastes from this sort of thing that he might easily be much shocked at the mere suggestion. Anyway, Cliff had gone down to San Diego for a stay of several weeks when the crisis arose, and so Tony turned to Barney on an occasion when he had come out to take her to a special movie.

It was a beautiful November night, warm and soft, with stars shining entirely over the city, and the lights of Berkeley and Oakland sparkling like necklaces of diamonds against the dark spaces of the bay. Parties parked in ceremonious little car at the Marin street curb, for the movie; afterward at Tony's easier suggestion, they drove there for a while. Barney took her to the splendid curves on Twin Peaks, where they got out and stood staring down at the brilliant panorama below them.

"It's probably the most interesting city in the world," said Barney, with simplicity.

"San Francisco? Well, some day I'll see the others, and then I'll know," Tony answered, leaning her elbows on the fence rail. "Barney," she went ou, in sudden courage, "there's something I want to ask you. I've got to ask someone, and there seems to be no one else."

"Shoot," Barney said, in an odd voice. His own elbow was close to hers on the fence, he bent his head toward her. Tony looked up at him with eyes that glittered in the dark.

"You know Miss Cutter? who does the 'Bessie Saw It' column?"

"I don't know her, no. I know who she is, of course."

"Well, she's a big blonde; very affectionate and gushy, and terribly lazy, and I think terribly stupid, too," Tony went on. "She goes about and gathers up these little human-interest stories, and I help her get them into shape. She and Mr Fitch are great friends, you know."

"I heard that," he said slowly.

"She's gotten rather dependent on me," Tony resumed, "and she likes me. And now she's beginning to hint about my going up to her place to dine, and to the theater, do you see?"

"Don't you go," Barney said firmly, looking away. "You couldn't be seen with—that woman."

"I understand, of course, about her and Fitch," Tony said, with a little haughtiness bred of his masculine sureness and arrogance. "But—it may be my job to be nice to her."

"It isn't."

"Well, it'll be darned awkward. Of course, I could refuse this once—it's Ina Strawbridge."

"Tony, you couldn't go to the theater with them!" Barney muttered, not listening. "You don't want to have anything to do with a woman like that."

"Oh, Barney, isn't that rather hard? She's awfully friendly, and she must be so much alone."

"Yes, that's all right. But it isn't up to you to square things. She did what she did with her eyes open; she's no baby."

"It seems to me that's rather narrow and puritanical."

"It may be. That's the way men like their women."

"That isn't necessarily the way women like their women. I know they're double-crossing Mrs. Fitch, but certainly he's as bad as she is, and, in any case, I've got my job to think about!" Tony said warmly.

Barney was silent for a little while. Then he said in a gentle brotherly voice:

"I don't think I'd worry about my job, Tony. Just refuse her invitations nicely, and after a little while she'll know; she'll stop bothering you."

"I'll bet he put her up to asking me!"

"Well, maybe. But whatever happened, you can't get mixed into it. You don't know who'd see you. The only women who go with her are her sort."

"Oh, nonsense, Barney. Nobody'd think I was like that just because I went to see Ina Strawbridge."

"Well, I tell you, you oughtn't to do it. And Cliff would say the same."

"She hasn't asked me yet," Tony said drily, in a pause. She wished that she had not consulted Barney. "I ought to get back," she said, after a pause. Instead of turning from the fence that hung so high above the sleeping city Barney said suddenly: "Listen a minute, Tony—"

She knew what was coming. Her elbows on the fence, her chin in her palms, she did not turn.

"Something I want to get over to you," Barney began awkwardly. "Know what it is?" He laughed unhappily. "You're ten times smarter than I am," he said. "Of course you know what it is."

Tony turned her bright eyes to him thoughtfully.

"You and me getting—engaged, you mean, Barney?" The words sounded flat—funny.

"Engaged," he echoed. "I don't want to—I'm only making a hundred and fifty a month and I don't want to rush you. But it seems to me that I've always thought that—that you and I—"

There was a silence.

"The thing is—I'm not really thinking of marrying anyone right now," Tony said, awkward in her turn. "I—well, I guess I'm not thinking about it!"

They both laughed mirthlessly, and Barney said gruffly:

"Well, how about thinking about it?"

"I don't know," Tony muttered, feeling babyish and irresolute and insincere.

"If we were engaged I feel that I'd have something to work for," Barney told her.

"I know. But—well, I am sort of not—well, thinking about that sort of thing," Tony reiterated.

She walked away from him, toward the car; they got in in silence.

"You pay me the highest compliment a man can pay a woman, you know," Tony observed gaily, as they drove down the hill.

"I love you," Barney said briefly, coldly.

"I'm very proud of it." She was saying perfectly senseless and meaningless things, but she wanted desperately to save his pride.

"I don't think I meant to tell you so soon, not until I have something to offer you, anyway. But you knew it."

"Well, if I didn't, I do now. And I do like you tremendously, Barney; we'll do. After all, I asked you what to do tonight, instead of Cliff or Bendy."

Barney made no comment upon this for some time. Then he burst out unhappily: "I wish to God I could protect you from Fitch and his love affairs!"

"Oh, don't worry about me," Tony assured him. "I'll—I'll tell her that I have an understanding with you and you don't like me to go out with other men!" she suggested suddenly.

They were standing in the dark doorway of her own home now; Barney leaned toward her eagerly.

"Will you do that?"

"It would be an alibi," Tony said.

"No, but will you do that?"

"Then they may ask you."

"But I mean—we have an understanding, haven't we?"

She looked up at him curiously, unsmilingly.

"Does it mean so much to you, Barney?" she asked, in surprise.

"Well—" he began, and stopped.

"But an understanding is an engagement, isn't it?"

"Only—that I'd like to think about it."

"Think about it, then, Tony," Barney said, lowering his voice, "I don't want to rush you. It's only that I want you so much, and that I'm afraid someone else will get you."

Tony laughed nervously, liking him, in his awkwardness, more than she wanted to like him.

"But you do like me a little, anyway?" All Barney's arrogance and confidence were gone.

"You know I do. I'll think about it—I truly will, Barney." She was laughing again, at the foot of the long stairway, now.

She felt in her heart that she never would marry Barney Kerr. Still, it was distinctly a passed milestone to have him want her.

One morning in the office she confided in big blond Vince Toller.

"Vince, you know Bess Cutter?"

"Sure," Vince answered, with a surprised glance.

"Well?" He really was very German; it was almost "vell."

"Well—would you?"

"Would I? I go."

"Oh, are you going, too?"

"They ask me."

"Oh—" Tony smiled in sudden relief. "Well, that makes a difference!" she admitted.

"Why not?" the man demanded.

"Well, after all—" she began shyly.

"Now, see," Vince Toller said. "I don't bother with all this moralizing business. She is my friend and he is my boss, now—now, what else do we do? We say, 'No, you are not good enough for me,' and then we don't make friends here where we work. You think she can hurt you?"

"No, I don't!" Tony protested.

"You say, 'No, I'm not like she is'?"

"Well—" Tony tried to pass it off with ingenuous laughter. "I'm not."

"All girls are like that. Only the right man does not say, 'Come to me!'"

"You have a high opinion of the sex, Vince," Tony said, her face hot.

"Some—the man asks, and they have and they say 'Yes,'" he said. "Some—no. He does not like them, he does not ask them."

"And that's the whole difference?"

"No, because sometimes he can say, 'Marry me,' and then the sisters and the aunts are happy. But if there is also a wife, and this he cannot say, then he must do what he can, and to him she comes. Now! Do you go Tuesday?"

"Oh, yes, I'm going." Tony said sulkily. She naturally wanted men to respect her and resent her attitude. It was maddening to be laughed at, to be thought a prude. If men were not going to differentiate between women who quite frankly sold themselves for furs and orchids and luxurious apartments, and girls who held themselves as too fine for that sort of traffic, then—then it was just too bad!

She told Brenda and her aunt that she was going to a little office party that Miss Cutter was giving on Tuesday night; Miss Bruce flushed a little and blinked at her but said nothing, but Brenda chose an opportunity to protest.

"Tony, this Miss Cutter: You told me—I understood that she and Mr. Fitch—"

"They're friends," Tony admitted.

"You said—"

"Oh, Brenda, for heaven's sake!"

"I wish such people wouldn't ask you!" Brenda diverged, in vexation.

"I wish they wouldn't. But they have."

CHAPTER VII

Bessie's apartment was in the popular neighborhood of the big hill hotels; it was rich with color. The curtains were taffeta in pale French tones and hues; there were silver cords and tassels, great cushions of brocade, fat chairs upholstered in pale satin-ish satin and embellished with knobs and scrolls of thick gold. A row of some six long-legged dolls was on a cushioned window seat; an Italian doll, a doll that looked like a little Empress Eugenie; there was a dog, tiny and barking and red-eyed in a tangle of pale brown hair.

"There, Bismarck!" Bessie said, laughing, looking very handsome passing cocktails with the air of a woman who knows what men want. "Top hattin'!"

Bismarck barked on, and was kept in the bathroom for his bad manners. Tony, feeling uncomfortable and out of place, nevertheless threw herself into the conversation heartily. Bessie seemed quite different in her own home. In the office she was the woman of the world. Here she was quieter, even a little timid, very anxious that everything should go right and that Mr. Fitch should be pleased. With Tony she was at first a little self conscious, but that wore off, and the dinner was excellent, and the show most amusing. Vince took Tony home decorously at eleven.

"It was nothing; it was just like any other party. We had dinner at Mrs. Cutter's, and then went to the show, and Vince brought me home. It was all right, not very thrilling, but really business in a way!" she said impatiently, undressing.

It was well over, the Cutter-dinner crisis. Tony hoped fervently that it wouldn't occur again.

One day the city editor asked her if she was in a good humor, and had had her lunch, and didn't have any special dates for the week-end.

"I think I'm all that, Greeny. Only I have that debutante lunch in Burlingame tomorrow."

"You weren't going down there?"

"Oh, um. Just going to telephone."

"Well, listen, here's this midwinter carnival over in Piedmont."

"I think I'd like to do it!" Tony said, with all a girl's eager anticipation of a party.

"Here's what it is: Arnoldson wants a page of it, see, because his wife is the head of the committee. They're opening the new clubhouse with a lunch and a program—sports of all sorts, I believe it is. And then afterward a big dinner and speeches and a fancy-dress dance."

"I Think I'm All That, Greeny."

"Ooch, fancy doings!" Tony said.

"I don't know what it's all about," the city editor said gloomily; "they're always getting up these things. I should think they'd get sick and tired of seeing each other."

"Between ourselves, they do," Tony told him. "They get bored to death. The girls have nervous breakdowns, and their mothers go off to New York or Honolulu—anywhere, to get out of the everlasting dinners and teas!"

"Then why do they do it?"

"Oh, for something to do. And as a sort of announcement that a girl's marriageable. That's what it is, really; an open market."

"Not so bad to have to work for your living?" Greenwood offered, after thought.

"Not so bad," Tony laughed joyously. "But tell me what you want me to do Saturday," she said, sobering.

"Go to this Piedmont thing, keep an eye on the cameraman, get in touch with Mr. Arnoldson right away, and do whatever he wants done. Have you a fancy dress—Queen Isabella pawning her jewels, something like that?"

"You're thinking of tableaux. Yes, I have a gorgeous fancy dress. But I shouldn't think I'd be expected to go as a guest, would I?"

"No, you wouldn't be a guest. But I think the old man would like you to mingle in with the glad throng. Well, you go over there Saturday, see?—and get the lunch. Then, if you have some time in the afternoon, do part of the story—I'll see that you get a typewriter—and turn your stuff over to Hotchkiss — he's the cameraman that looks like Mussolini—he'll bring it in. Then you dress up and do the dinner and bring that in as soon as you can."

"Take a ten o'clock train, say?"

"Oh, I'll have someone over there to bring you back. And you're a good sport!"

SEVEN DEAD HUNTERS IS TOLL DEER SEASON

Six Others Injured According to the Conservation Department Report

Seven hunters dead and six injured was the casualty toll during the deer hunting season which attracted an estimated 85,000 sportsmen into Michigan's northwoods.

The number of deaths and the number of injuries exceeded those of the 1934 deer-hunting season during which four hunters lost their lives and two were injured.

However, in 1934, all fatalities were the direct result of gun accidents, while during 1935, only three deer-hunters died as the result of gun wounds; two expiring in the woods from heart attacks and one from drowning.

Of the six hunters injured this year, two were hurt so seriously by rifle bullets as to face the possibility of losing a leg.

STANDARD OF INDIANA NOT INVOLVED IN INTERNATIONAL OIL SITUATION

From new paper comments, letters, and remarks made at our service stations we have detected a disposition on the part of the public to condemn Standard Oil Company (Indiana) as being involved in oil matters in Ethiopia and Italy.

Standard Oil Company of Indiana has absolutely no connection with the oil situation in Ethiopia or Italy and no trade with either country. Any Standard Oil company which may have business in either country is entirely separate and distinct from this company, and in no way does it express any attitude on our part toward the international situation in oil.

We are being embarrassed in this matter by the use in some of the newspapers of the term "Standard Oil" in headlines and articles without designation of what Standard Oil company is meant. Readers of the newspapers, many of whom do not get beyond headlines, apparently jump at the conclusion that the Standard company with which they are familiar through seeing its service stations and trucks on streets and highways—in other words, our company—is involved. Any resentment that arises, in consequence, is often unfairly directed at our company.

WPA FUNDS HELP TO LURE TOURISTS

In the Lower Peninsula the tourist program is being carried out mostly in the northern territory comprising Charlevoix, Missaukee and Emmet counties.

Tourists wishing to enter Michigan's spacious playground from the water will be accommodated at Charlevoix where a concrete dock is under construction, also a recreational park which will have facilities for many outdoor sports such as tennis, baseball, shuffle board, etc.

Extending Park

The municipal park at Lake City will be extended to the shore of Missaukee Lake, through the construction of new streets.

At Petoskey WPA workers are constructing several additional rearing ponds for speckled and rainbow trout. Improvement of existing ponds is also under way. A total of about 70 men from the WPA and the Wolverine CCC Camps at Springdale are at work on the projects.

Aside from its extensive tourist program, the WPA has started public improvement work in northern counties resulting in the transfer of 13,000 men and women in the western half of the Upper Peninsula from direct relief to WPA rolls. Approximately 3,000 others have been given work in the eastern portion of this territory and in the northern part of Lower Michigan.

SPORTS FANS FOLLOW THE AMERICAN BOY

Boys and young men of this city who wish to improve their tennis service, their basket-shooting eyes, their forward passing talent, or their crawl stroke, can enlist the aid of the nation's foremost coaches and players by subscribing to THE AMERICAN BOY magazine and following the sports interviews and fiction stories that appear each month.

"When I was in high school," says a famous decathlon champion, "I read a track article in THE AMERICAN BOY that gave me my first clear-cut idea of the western style of high jumping. At practice I laid the open magazine on the grass and studied it as I worked out. That afternoon I increased the height of my jump three inches."

That was a long time ago, but today thousands of future champions just as eagerly follow THE AMERICAN BOY.

"This year," states Griffith Ogden Ellis, editor, "our staff writers have gone to the two greatest football teams of the country — Minnesota and Pittsburgh — for first-hand tips on strategy, blocking, tackling, passing, and the fine points of play. They have interviewed Jack Medica, the world's fastest swimmer, and his coach, Ray Daughters. Gone to Eastern High School of Washington, D. C., Eastern Interscholastic basketball champions. In the past they have followed the Grapefruit Circuit of the major leagues in Florida, sat on the bench at the Rose Bowl, sought out the famous runners, divers, All-American ends, tackles and keel field men, to bring their story of how to play the game to the young men of America.

"In addition to our fiction, adventure, exploration, hobby counsel, and vocational help, we shall continue to encourage young men to improve their game in every line of sport."

Send your subscription to THE AMERICAN BOY, 7430 Second Blvd., Detroit, Mich. Enclose with your name and address $1 for a year's subscription, $2 for three years, and add 50 cents a year if you want the subscription to go to a foreign address. On the newsstands, 10 cents a copy.

All Dairymen Urged to Have Bangs' Disease Tests

Charlevoix county has the opportunity of eliminating Bangs' disease from its cattle without appreciable loss by the owner. At the present time many communities in the county have already been tested with very few reactors. It would seem that there would never be a better time than now to have this work done when the federal government is offering this service free of charge.

It is always much better to take care of any situation in its early stages rather than wait until it is serious and suffer heavy losses. Preliminary estimates indicate about one per cent reactors, which is very low. Charlevoix county was one of the very first counties in the state to eliminate T.B. from its cattle. Why should it not occupy the same position in regard to Bangs' disease? The government will pay indemnities up to $25 per cow for grade animals, and $50 in the case of purebreds. This is in addition to the meat value of the animals, so one can readily see that no loss is suffered on the average grades of dairy cattle. This program has been continued until July 1st, so why not apply for the test and have it done this winter when all of your cattle are indoors, and with less inconvenience to yourself.

Some months ago every dairyman received an application blank. Don't put it off any longer. Send this blank to the county agent's office in Boyne City, or to Dr. C. G. Jensen, general delivery, Charlevoix. If you find that the veterinary is making tests in your community, get in touch with him and he will make your herd test at the same time as all others in the same community, which of course is highly desirable. Please don't put this off any longer. You will be surprised to note the increased demand for surplus cattle from this county as soon as buyers know that there is such a small percentage of reactors in this county, and that efforts are being made to have all cattle tested.

Livestock Auction Established In Traverse City

All farmers will be interested in the announcement that they may now sell their livestock at Traverse City every Tuesday afternoon at 1:30. In the southern part of the state a large number of these auctions are held weekly.

This is the first time that one has been established close enough to Charlevoix county to be of any advantage to local farmers. A small charge is made for each head sold at auction, and there is no yard fee charged. Not alone that, but you may see your animals weighed and receive your money at the time of sale. In addition your transportation is less costly and the losses from shrinkage are avoided.

The charges on the various kinds of livestock are as follow: Hog per head, 25 cents; shoats, under 50 pounds, 15 cents; cow and pig, $1; cattle sold singly, $1; cattle sold three or more, 75 cents; veal calves, 50 cents; bull, $1; sheep and lambs per head, 25 cents; horses, 5 per cent up to $100 and $5 per $100 or over. A charge of one-half of one per cent additional is made on all sales for insurance of stock and guarantee of payment to seller.

It would seem that this service would be attractive to local farmers who have livestock for sale. In any case our advice is to try out this service. If satisfied it will mean much to this county. If not satisfied, this practice need not be continued. However, if look attractive as the prices received during the last two or three weeks have been very nearly the Detroit prices, and you save the transportation and loss from shrinkage, in addition to other smaller charges.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

Iceberg lettuce is the outstanding feature of this week's market. It is reasonable and of an unusually fine quality. With most green vegetables fairly high, root vegetables and salads are indicated for ours, my.

The trend of egg prices is towards lower level, though fresh brown eggs are still in very plentiful. Butter prices are varying very little.

Fresh pork is now a good value, as are lamb legs and forequarter veal. Beef and smoked meats are fairly high. Fish prices are somewhat lower than in recent weeks.

Low Cost Dinner
Beef and Vegetable Pie
Cole Slaw
Bread and Butter
Chocolate Pudding
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner
Roast Pork Apple Sauce
Sweet Potatoes Creamed Onions
Bread and Butter
Fruit Salad
Tea or Coffee Milk

Very Special Dinner
Grapefruit
Celery Olives
Roast Beef with Yorkshire Pudding
Browned Potatoes, Glazed Carrots

NEW PRUNING METHOD AIDS FRUIT GROWERS

College Men Find Way to Improve Quality Without Reducing Yields

Discovery of a method of pruning fruit trees which improves the quality of fruit and does not reduce yields as old methods did is reported by the department of horticulture at Michigan State College.

This discovery came as a continuation of previous work which had proved that ordinary pruning methods seriously reduce the yields of fruit. The new method is called thin wood pruning, and its worth has been proved by several years of experimenting in Michigan orchards.

The basis of the method is the removal of small branches from the interior of the tree. It has been proved that this wood bears but little fruit and that is usually poorly colored and small in size.

Some orchard owners doubted the value of this pruning method and refused to have it used in their orchards. The branches of trees which one owner believed should be removed and those which the discoverers of the new method wanted to prune were then marked with strings and left to bear fruit. The owner found that he would have lost several bushels of fancy apples if he had pruned by the old method.

Thin Wood pruning is described fully in Special Bulletin No. 275, just published by Michigan State College. Many illustrations portray the effects of the method and the type of wood removed from the tree. The bulletin will be sent to those requesting it from the Bulletin Clerk, East Lansing.

Hints for Christmas Menus

The months and weeks have rushed by and I now look at my calendar and discover that Christmas is practically here! I don't know why, but it is always a surprise to me when this holiday really looms up, and then in looking around, I find that my friends have done their shopping and made their feastive preparations, and I'm still at the starting line! Though it means a lot of hurrying, Christmas Eve always finds me with my wreath—the turkey stuffed—and the chimney prepared for St. Nick!

Christmas traditions will naturally dictate part of your fare, but the kind of meat or fowl you serve will depend on your family's tastes and finances. Whatever fowl you decide upon, though, here are three menus—each tried out and pronounced perfect. Each menu contains traditional holiday dishes, but here and there you will find a touch that is new and different so each is a combination of old favorites and new delights—an old feast in a new setting:

CHRISTMAS MENU NO. I
Christmas Canapé
Chilled Tomato Juice Cocktail
Stuffed Celery Hearts
Watermelon Pickle
Roast Goose
Surprise Stuffing
Mashed Potatoes
Mint Glazed Carrots and Peas
Christmas Wreath Salad
Parkerhouse Rolls
Buttermilk Bran Bread
White Plum Pudding
Wine Jelly Sauce
Salted Nuts Coffee Raisins

Now let's just suppose that only the immediate family is going to be home for Christmas dinner—and a turkey would be too large, so why not have a nice roast shoulder of pork with corn stuffing? I've prepared this menu with that thought in mind, and I know you'll like it:

CHRISTMAS MENU NO. II
Chilled Fruit Juice
Olives Celery Radishes
Roast Shoulder of Pork
Corn Stuffing
Mashed Potatoes
Meringued Sweet Potatoes
Turkey Fruit Salad
Buttermilk Bran Bread Tea Rolls
Pumpkin Pie
Salted Nuts Coffee Mints

And now for the third menu! This, as you will notice, is built around a roast of lamb—a delicious meat for any dinner.

CHRISTMAS MENU NO. III
Cream of Mushroom Soup
With Croutons
Roast Leg of Lamb, Mint Dressing
Scalloped Potatoes
Cranberry Ice
Buttermilk Bran Bread
Parkerhouse Rolls
Frozen Pumpkin Pie
Coffee
Assorted Nuts Bonbons

For any or all of the recipes in the above menus, send your request with a self-addressed stamped envelope to Alice Hale Kent, Chief Dietitian and Home Economics Authority, Michigan, Bakeries, Inc., Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Let us furnish your second sheets, typewriter ribbons, adding machine rolls, scratch pads, ledger sheets, Charlevoix Courier.—22tf.

SHOP NOW

But few shopping days are remaining before Christmas. It is the wise buyers who shops now while crowds are not so large and stocks are in better assortment than they will be during the closing days. Shopping early allows sales people to give you more attention and better consideration respecting your wants. You can't blame them if in the stress and strain that comes with last minute rushes you are urged to make quicker decisions. Shop early—early in the week, early in the day. You will be serving others as well as yourself.

FRESHENING BREEZES

Detroit's prosperity has taken on a new high — they are rebuilding the ancient Grand Trunk depot.

Speaking of railroad relief, what about the Osceola county farmer who tried to shoot up a section crew?

Some day—some time—the Roosevelt administration might stumble on to something that is going to please the Saturday Evening Post.

Several Eloise patients were caught selling their blood to buy whiskey. Probably a new variation of that "life for a pint" episode.

A New York judge holds that duplicity is a woman's weapon. Can it be he was influenced by observing from the bench lingerie displays put on by woman witnesses?

Stuttering can be avoided, we are told, by walking on all fours. Rather an undignified posture while trying to explain to the collector why you are behind in your installment payments.

The California youth, trapped in a refrigerator car during a transcontinental journey, probably wishes he had remained at home and taken the woodshed warming dad had promised him for playing hookey.

A Macomb county prisoner sought to escape punishment by eating the evidence in full view of the court. Many the case that was lost during prohibition days because the boys at the jail house forgot to leave a few drops of evidence in a confiscated bottle.

And Now In Closing—

Give me the money that has been spent in war and I will clothe every man, woman and child in an attire of which kings and queens would be proud. I will build a schoolhouse in every valley over the whole earth. I will crown every hillside with a place of worship consecrated to the gospel of peace.—Charles Summer.

AT THE MOVIES

Alan Baxter, Film Find, Debuts In "Mary Burns"

A newcomer's first impressions of Hollywood are contradictory ones, according to Alan Baxter, new screen find, who makes his film debut in Walter Wanger's Paramount film, "Mary Burns, Fugitive," starring Sylvia Sidney and coming Wednesday and Thursday, December 18-19, to the Palace Theatre.

"The most interesting thing to me was finding out how pictures are made as I had never been to Hollywood before. The technique is very different from that of the stage but it is more absorbing, although I am just as much interested in writing as in acting," Baxter explained.

Romance, Race Thrills Feature Rogers Film

Adapted from the play whose humor, sunny romance and tingling horse race drama have made it a favorite of three generations of Americans, "In Old Kentucky" stars Rogers in a role that presents his rich down-to-earth character in its most lovable light.

Sam Hellman, famous humorist, and Gladys Lehman adapted the play to the screen in a modernized form, but preserved all of its drama and its rich comedy of character and incident.

DON'T COUGH TONIGHT!

Most night coughing is due to simple throat irritation. For this kind of cough you need the soothing, penetrating, relieving action of a real throat medicine—Thoxine.

In 15 minutes and with only one swallow, it will break up that harsh, irritating cough, help loosen phlegm and congestion. Also acts from within to check throat cold. Before you know it you'll be relieved—ready to sleep like a top.

If Thoxine fails you tonight, get your money back tomorrow. Pure, safe, even for children. 35c, 60c, $1.00 bottles. Central Drug Store.

STORY OF TEMPERANCE CRUSADE IS RELATED

Told to Members of Local Union at Meeting Last Friday Afternoon

What is known as the Woman's Crusade, against the liquor traffic started December 23, 1873, in the little town of Hillsboro, Ohio, and swept like a prairie fire across the continent. Hundreds of dram shops were closed and countless barrels of alcoholic drink gurgled into the gutters as the women visited the drug stores, saloons and hotels, asking the dealers to desist from their liquor selling. This movement culminated in the organization of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in November, 1874.

The story of the crusade was retold by Mrs. Lela Simmons at the meeting of the local union held last Friday afternoon with Mrs. M. B. Hooker. Group No. 2 served tea in honor of the long time members who were present in large numbers, and a certificate signed by the state officers was exhibited evidencing the recently acquired memorial membership of Mrs. Jennie Alcox, deceased, who was president of Charlevoix Union for nearly 20 years prior to 1923.

GARDEN CLUBS PLAN CAMPAIGN IN STATE TO BEAUTIFY ROADS

To make Michigan's highways the match in beauty as well as serviceability with the highways of other progressive states in the nation, the Federated Garden Clubs of Michigan will launch a long range, coordinated and statewide campaign early in the coming year, it was announced today.

The campaign, which will be educational in character and will seek through systematic education to organize the influence and support of the various interests in the state with a potential though latent concern in highway improvement, is to be under the direction of the special committee of Highway Beautification of Federated Garden Clubs of Michigan, of which W. Woodbridge Dickinson of St. Joseph, is chairman. The remaining personnel of the committee: Professor Edwin C. Goddard, Ann Arbor; Mrs. Noles L. Avery, Grand Rapids; Martin Frissel, Muskegon; Mrs. G. W. Bolling, Traverse City; Mrs. V. G. Dickerson, Lakeview; B. A. Walpole, East Lansing; Mrs. J. S. Symons, Saginaw.

The intelligent cooperation of the State Highway Department is already assured. The work of the committee will be directed largely toward organization of public sentiment in support of a comprehensive, long-term program which, without requiring large additional expenditures of public funds at any time will, progressively over a period of years, conserve and promote the natural beauties of lake shore and countryside along the state's already famously efficient highways.

Among the objectives of the campaign are:

The control through the State Highway Department of roadside advertising outside of city and town limits.

The promotion of higher standards of new road construction, as these standards affect scenic beauty. A fair example of these standards is exemplified in a section of route US-31, several miles north of Benton Harbor.

The stimulation of roadside planting.

CHIEF WARNS ABOUT CHRISTMAS FIRES

Points Out Precautions Which Will Eliminate Dangers

In fact to make Christmas a little more safe and, for that reason, a Merrier Christmas, Fire Chief Charles Marshall has issued an appeal to all people of the city to avoid the fire hazards which usually accompany the holiday season.

Every year in some part of the nation a Christmas fire tragedy occurs and Chief Marshall doesn't want this year's tragedy to happen in Charlevoix.

The opportunity for fire is increased during the holidays by the wide use of lighting equipment. This equipment can be used safely if a few simple rules are observed and if all people will remember the following facts we should avoid fire or tragedy.

Place tree a safe distance from stove or fireplace.

Never leave lighted Christmas tree unguarded at any time.

Do not place tree where it will obstruct any exit of a room.

Remove the tree from the house before it becomes dry.

SPEARING BECOMES LEGAL ON JANUARY FIRST

Sport Open on Inland Lakes During January and February

The razing for taking black bass in Michigan comes to a close for the year Tuesday, December 31, the Department of Conservation announced today. Black bass will not be legal game until June 25.

Ice fishermen, however, are permitted to take all species of non-game fish and any other species of game fish except brook, brown, rainbow trout and grayling.

The two-month season for spearing through the ice opens January 1. This season is open during January and February on all inland waters, except trout streams and waters not otherwise closed to spearing. The use of artificial light while spearing is forbidden.

The species of fish that may legally be taken with the spear are: Carp, suckers, mullet, redhorse, sheepshead, lake trout, smelt, great northern, grays pike and pickerel, muskellunge, whitefish, ciscoes, pilotfish or Menominee whitefish, dogfish and garpike.

APPEAL TO DRIVERS FOR SAFETY IN 1936

Branch License Offices to Issue Picture Depicting Auto Toll

An appeal to Michigan drivers to use care and intelligence on the roads in 1936 will go to every operator applying to the secretary of state's office for license renewal.

"This license, which has been granted you to operate a motor vehicle, is more than a legal privilege. It carries with it a tremendous moral responsibility.

"There are traffic emergencies awaiting you—a human life may depend on your attitude. How will you drive?"

PETITIONING FOR AIR-MAIL SERVICE

Other Plans to Benefit City Now In Process of Negotiation — Need Support of All Civic Bodies

Secretary Tyler of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce reports a movement on foot to secure air mail service between Charlevoix and the east and west air lines now operating through Grand Rapids and Muskegon. Letters have already gone out from his office to the division of mail service, U. S. Post Office Department, and to Congressman Prentiss M. Brown, at St. Ignace, urging that steps be taken to establish such a service at least during the summer months.

There would be two possible routes — one, by way of Manistee, Ludington and Traverse City along the coast, and the other, up through the middle of the state from Grand Rapids. The former route would seem to be the best, both from the standpoint of the air line operating the service and that of its potential users, as the greater portion of Western Michigan resort business is to be found in the coastal cities.

Present freight and passenger traffic, even in summer, would not be sufficient to tempt operators of an air line to come into this territory, but a mail contract from the government would make it feasible between Muskegon or Grand Rapids and the Straits or Mackinac Island. However, if the Post Office Department can be convinced that the present purchase of air mail stamps would be greatly increased by elimination of the present delay due to train transportation of the mails to the nearest air mail station, a contract might be obtained. There is little doubt but that our summer visitors, with their business connections and friends in cities of the south and middle west, and even on both coasts, would use the air mail to a far greater extent than at present were it to become a through service from Northern Michigan resorts possibly trebling their purchases of stamps.

It will, of course, not be possible for mail planes to make stops at every city on the route, so it is necessary that the Post Office Department be persistently and persuasively urged towards the selection of the coastal route in preference to the inland and of Charlevoix as an advantageous mailing point. It would seem a good idea for other civic organizations of Charlevoix to support the Association of Commerce in its effort to secure this air mail service, with its accompanying advantages of quick passenger and package transportation, by writing to Congressman Brown and the division of mail service at Washington in advocacy of the plan.

Several other matters of importance to Charlevoix are being handled through the Association of Commerce, among them a proposal to establish a coal dock and handling machinery on Lake Charlevoix, cooperating with the local coal dealers in making the city a wholesale distributing point for a large surrounding district; also, a sea-plane base with ramp, dock and hangar for passenger transportation, and two proposals from steamship companies to operate boats between this point and Mackinac Island and Chicago. Announcement of details will be made as the plans take shape.

SET THE CALENDAR FOR FARMERS' WEEK

Annual Vacation Time for Thousands of Farmers Will Come Feb. 3-7

The twenty-first annual Farmers' Week at Michigan State College will cause thousands of Michigan farmers and members of their families to mark their calendar for their vacation at East Lansing from February 3 to 7.

The week is always selected by many farm organizations as the date for their annual meetings, when they decide policies for the next year, review past accomplishments, and elect officers for their group. Some of the groups are concerned with livestock or farm crops but an increasing number of associations are interested primarily in the welfare of the folks on the farm and in ways to make farm life more enjoyable.

STATE FERRIES CLOSE THEIR GREATEST YEAR

Car Ferry Took Over Route December 16, With Four Trips Daily

The State Highway Department has just closed its books on the greatest ferry season at the Straits of Mackinac in history.

For the eight-month period of operation ending December 15, the three-boat fleet operated by the department carried 143,174 passenger cars and 287,961 paid passengers between Mackinac City and St. Ignace. The season's receipts amounted to $290,937.

The three ships went into winter quarters the morning of December 16. They will be reconditioned during the season of idleness in preparation for next year's season which opens April 16.

Ferry service at the Straits is maintained during the winter season by the Mackinac Transportation Company under a contract with the State Highway Department. Boats leave Mackinac City at 7 a. m., 9:15 a. m., 1 p. m., and 6 p. m. daily, and St. Ignace at 6:30 a. m., 10:30 a. m., 3 p. m. and 7:30 p. m. daily. All times are Eastern Standard.

START SUPERVISED WINTER ACTIVITIES

MUNICIPAL SKATING RINK OPENED SATURDAY

Grant Street Hill Designated For Coasting From 3:30 to 5:30 and 7 to 10, Daily

With the advent of seasonable weather, two divisions of winter sports activities have been made available to local enthusiasts within the past few days.

The municipal skating rink at the school grounds was put in use for the first time Saturday evening and the customary large number of skaters have been using the rink nightly since that time. With continued freezing weather a good foundation of ice has been built up and the rink is improving daily.

Supervised coasting is also being made available for children and adults. Grant street hill has been designated and prepared for this sport, and a schedule of coasting hours set up as follows: 3:30 to 5:30 p. m., and 7 to 10 p. m. and later. The hill will be closed between 5:30 and 7 o'clock.

The hill will be iced and policed. Motorists are asked to cooperate in making the sport safe by detouring from Antrim street during the coasting hours designated. At the same time, as a precaution against accidents, children are asked to refrain from sliding on other hills in the city which are not policed.

Both the skating and coasting come under the direction and supervision of those in charge of the local WPA recreational program.

NATION'S CHURCH CAMPAIGN AGAINST ALCOHOL

Detailed Educational Campaign Instituted In Chicago

On December 3rd, at Chicago, Ill., 100 churches of the Methodist Episcopal denomination launched a detailed program of education against the use of and traffic in alcoholic beverages.

The Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian and other denominational groups are either inaugurating or planning similar programs, intended to appraise the current liquor conditions in the light of two years of the re-established traffic with the objective of appropriate action. There is evidence of a rapidly growing arousal of interest in the temperance movement as the liquor business again has legal right to advertise and extend itself throughout the nation.

KIPMEN TO PLAY AT HOME FRIDAY

MEET PETOSKEY CAGERS IN A RETURN CONTEST

Took Fifth Straight Defeat Last Friday, Losing 21 to 13 to Grayling, Conference Leaders

After playing away from home three successive weeks, Charlevoix High school cagers return to their home hardwood Friday night for the first of two contests during the holiday season.

Petoskey, who handed the Kipmen a 26 to 19 defeat two weeks ago, come here for a return tilt and the game should be a good one.

Charlevoix met their fifth straight defeat at Grayling last Friday night, dropping a 21 to 13 decision to what appears to be one of the top-notch Northern Michigan Class C quints this season.

After a close first period, Grayling led 4 to 3 and were never again headed. They extended their margin 10 and 5 at the half and 16 to 10 at the third quarter. Coach Kipke used nine men during the contest.

Lovely, Grayling forward, was the event's high scorer, with nine points. Peet, Rath and Carey divided Charlevoix' scoring with three points each.

At the present time East Jordan and Grayling, both undefeated, share top honors in the Northern Michigan Class C Conference, which this year has been enlarged to eight schools. The members hip includes Charlevoix, East Jordan, Grayling, Boyne City, Gaylord, Kalkaska, Mancelona, Harbor Springs. Grayling and Kalkaska are the new members. From a standpoint of scores in early games, the two leaders are the conference standouts.

In Class D basketball circles, the Pellston team, which went to the state finals last year and is this season coached by Max Novak, is the Northern Michigan leader. Pellston has already hung up victories over Charlevoix and Boyne City, Class C schools.

EXTENO DEADLINE FOR AUTO PLATES

ATWOOD GIVES DRIVERS ANOTHER MONTH

Midnight of Friday, January 31st, Is Set As Limit for Use of 1935 License Plates

Extension of one month of the deadline for the purchase of 1936 automobile license plates has been granted by Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state. The order specifies that new plates must be purchased by midnight, Friday, January 31, if cars are to be driven. Other states will be notified of Atwood's decision, and will be requested to be guided by it, so far as Michigan plates are concerned. Motorists contemplating driving out of Michigan any time after January 1, however, are cautioned that inconvenience may result if they carry 1935 plates; in many states, January 1 is the absolute deadline each year.

Atwood warned that further extension after January 31 is not contemplated, calling attention to the fact that 1936 plates were placed on sale this year far earlier than in previous years, as a device for aiding the motor industry which placed its 1936 models on the market considerably in advance of the date in previous years.

Because of the advanced date for placing 1936 plates on sale, it is a natural consequence that the final date for purchase of the plate will also be advanced this year. The law permit extension of 30 days after January 1, in the discretion of the secretary of state. At the time the law was enacted, however, new plates were being placed on sale in December of the preceding year; this year, sale of plates was started much in advance of that date.

Stickers, or half-year permits, may of course be purchased for half the price of plates, which would defer until August 1 the necessity for payment of the other half of the plate cost.

MILLION PARCELS LAND DELINQUENT

WILL BE SOLD FOR TAXES BY STATE NEXT MAY

State Employes Working Nights Preparing List for First Tax Sale Since Year 1932

Employes of the auditor general's office have extended their working hours into the night in a frantic attempt to prepare an estimated 1,000,000 description for the first tax-delinquent land sale since 1932.

The estimate of the number of parcel to be sold is that of Auditor General John J. O'Hara, and he said it may be wide of the mark. The sale will embrace tax delinquent lands of 1931 and prior years.

O'Hara estimated that three-quarters of the land to go on the auction block in May is unplatted, and placed the total acreage of unplatted parcels at 2,800,000 acres. Chester M. Morse, of the State Tax Commission, said he believes there will be not more than 500,000 parcels offered for sale in May. He offered no estimate on acreage.

Land of All Types

Records of the auditor general show the property to be sold includes industrial sites, city residences, farms, cut-over timber land and waste acreage. Employes of the office are busying themselves with the long task of clearing the tax delinquent land records of all property affected by the last annual collection of $12,000,000 in delinquent taxes in August.

Until September 1 owners had the right to pay taxes under the 10-year amortization plan of the Moore-Holbrook bill, or in full, without penalties. They still have the right to take up the delinquency under either plan until May, with the payment of penalties. In addition, they may bid it in at the auctions.

Will Cost $19,000.

The exempt tax law provides that the property available in May must be advertised five times in newspapers designated by the auditor general. O'Hara pointed out that the last advertisement of tax delinquent property cost the state $125,000 because descriptions of parcels were printed. This year, he said, the expenditure will be not more than $19,000.

Prior to 1933 lands not bid in at the sale could be deeded to the Conservation Department after five years. An act of the 1933 Legislature provided that the land in question be listed with the auditor general's office, subject to a lien for accumulated taxes and penalties.

The exact extent of the coming sale is still a matter for speculation. Under direction of Dr. Robert Ford, of the University of Michigan, works progress administration researchers are to conduct a survey to determine the location, value and possibilities of unredeemed land. The survey will require research in the offices of each county, and will be ruled by the auditor general's office and the state tax commissioner.

Child Care Project Starts January 2

The leaders elected to carry on the new project, "Child Care," will have their first discussion Thursday, January 2, in the basement of the Methodist church at East Jordan, at 10 a. m., and continuing until 3:30. This will be the first of a series of three constructive discussions, and it is hoped that a large number of groups will avail themselves of this wonderful opportunity.

The topic at the first meeting will be the "Child's Curiosity." The second subject announced is "Self Reliance in Children," and the third will be "Play." Any group in Charlevoix county is welcome to participate in these discussions. All that needs be done is to organize yourselves and select two leaders who will attend the next three discussions and then give this information obtained to their local groups at some previously arranged time.

Mrs. Lynde suggests that what you do with your child's curiosity may make or break his success as an adult. Curiosity is a blessing to mankind. It is the force behind civilization, and will continue to change it. Modern parents will strive to cultivate it for the benefit of their children.

Your extension agent will greatly appreciate hearing from you if you would like to belong to a group to receive these lessons. Or better yet, if you will consent to act as a leader. We hope to have at least a dozen groups enrolled in this project. Remember, the first lesson on Thursday, January 2, beginning at 10, and continuing until 3:30.

Control of Internal Parasites In Horses Announced

Three kinds of horse Bots cause considerable loss to farmers and horse breeders in this section. Botflies seriously annoy horses and mules and often make them uncontrollable. The horse Botfly is the most troublesome and is gradually increasing in severity. Horse Bots attach themselves to the stomach and into tunics, and not only interfere with direction but may also cause stoppage resulting in death.

The Botflies lay their eggs on the hair. As the horse licks itself, the eggs find their way to the stomach where they develop into maggots, which attach themselves to the walls of the stomach. Great damage may be done by these hundreds of Bots at this stage of their development. Later the maggots find their way back to the ground where in a few days they develop into flies.

The treatment consists in administration of carbon disulphide in capsule form. This treatment not only destroys most of the Botflies maggots but, in addition, other parasites, all of which annoy the horses and keeps them in poor condition. The cost of the treatment is only 50 cents per head, but to do the work at this modest sum it is necessary to give the treatment to a large number of horses each day. In a few days you will receive a circular letter announcing this campaign so that a schedule may be made out for the work. Speak to your neighbors and urge them to have these treatment given. Answer the circular letter to indicate your desire to have this work done.

EGG GRADING REGULATIONS START JAN. 1ST

New Law Aimed to Eliminate Traffic In Inedible Eggs In Michigan

Egg grading regulations which will assure quality products to the consuming public will go into effect in Michigan January 1, Commissioner of Agriculture James F. Thomson announced today.

The regulations call for four grades of eggs, Fancy, and Grades A, B and C. The regulations are similar to those issued some time ago but later rescinded, except that the license fee feature has been eliminated under the new plan. Permits to deal in eggs will be issued free of charge by the Department of Agriculture.

"Michigan is the forty-first state in the Union to adopt egg grading regulations," Thomson declared. "It is an advanced step and will tend to stop the traffic in inedible eggs. Grades are set up strictly on a quality basis. The sale of eggs by weight is not required under the new regulations, but is advocated to a certain extent."

At the same time Commissioner Thomson has issued additional egg grading regulation under which eggs can be sold under the Michigan Bonded Farm Produce Plan. Only the two highest grades can qualify for sale under this program, which was set up some time ago by the Department of Agriculture. The bonded program applies to Michigan eggs only, and will carry a bonded label supplied by the Department of Agriculture, which assures the consuming public that the eggs are of two grades. Under the bonded plan fancy grade eggs must be of uniform size and the weight not less than 22 ounces to a dozen.

With surrounding states having egg grading regulations Michigan has become the dumping ground for all eggs that have failed to meet the requirements in these states, the commissioner pointed out. The new regulations in Michigan will prevent this practice, Thomson says. The commissioner pointed out that strict enforcement of the potato grading law in Michigan has resulted in premium prices being paid for Michigan grown potatoes on the Chicago market this year. The same will apply to eggs.

"There is no reason why a consumer should not be able to go into a store in Michigan and buy eggs that are known to be up to grade. The Department of Agriculture is going further than this, in showing the public that they can get the highest quality eggs all of a uniform size with the distributor bonded with the state."

EXPECT INCREASE IN STATE'S AID PENSION

Federal Government Likely to Match State Funds After January 1

Increased pensions for Michigan's aged residents, to be made possible through federal funds, are nearing realization.

Higher pensions are expected to become effective January 1, when the federal government will match State Old Age Assistance funds now amounting to $2,000,000. This will make it possible to approximately double the state awards which now average about $11 a month, with a $15 monthly maximum.

Leaving home with the brown suitcase in the foggy soft morning, Tony had joined the newspaper group on the boat; Spike Ilyan was in charge of the two cameramen and of the expedition generally.

"Can you drive?" Spike asked her, when she was on the front seat beside him, and they were rolling along through Oakland's long streets toward the southwest.

"Yep," Tony nodded. "Why, tired?"

"No, but I may not feel like driving tonight," Spike said significantly.

"Oh, shame!" Tony reproached him.

"I'll drive!" Tony was in wild spirits, although she held herself so steadily in check that there was no sign of them. She felt in her pocket now and then for her pencil, her scratch paper. Maybe some big story would break today—a fire, or an engagement.

They reached the clubhouse at eleven; it was always thrilling to say "Press" to the authorities that would have barred their way; it was especially gratifying today because great preparations had been made for the comfort of the press; there were tables and typewriters, and Miss Taft especially was to be considered; Mrs. Rogers had made arrangements for Miss Taft to rest at somebody's house this afternoon and dress there for the dinner.

"I could change right here at the club," Tony, finally finding Mrs. Rogers in a whirl of directions and last duties, said good-naturedly.

"My dear, you'll do nothing of the kind. You're to go to the Patterson house—right near here. It looks over the ninth green, and get a hot bath and take everything comfortably," little Mrs. Rogers protested in turn. "It's all turning out so beautifully," she exulted. "It's going to be such an exquisite day, when the fog clears up, and we've four hundred reservations for the luncheon. There never was anything like it!"

The new clubhouse had been built on the site of the old one; the golf links were beautifully groomed and green; the roads took their old turnings. It was only the great main building that was new. It was all very novel, very exhilarating; it was more fun, Tony thought, to be a reporter and have a business reason to be here than to be one of the many girls who, as one o'clock approached, were gathering on the lawns and the porches, nervously discussing the subject of the dance tonight.

Others than girls were gathering, too; men who shouted at other men, women whose costumes were like a fashion display; but the debutantes were Tony's especial interest, and she devoted herself exclusively to them. She knew them all now, which ones were popular and which ones were not, the rich ones and the ones whose mothers were having a desperate time trying to keep their social footing.

Tony slipped into the ballroom and looked at the decorated tables and the souvenirs and the name cards; she found the press seats, made some notes of decorations, and went out to the great screened plazza where luncheon was spread.

The day was sturdily clear with a cold wind; women shivered in their gala attire and put on heavy coats while they lunched. But afterward the sports went well, and Tony had fun questioning and befriending the adorable little members of the "Juvenilia"; fat little rosy boys and girls who paraded their dolls, dogs, cats, ponies, goats about the circle, in decorated leading strings or coaches or cages. The cameramen were patient with the small restless people, and proud mothers assisted gallantly from the side lines. Tony presently could go to the Patterson house and introduce herself as "the young lady from the Call," with a feeling that everything was right with the world.

CHAPTER VIII

A delightful home, the Pattersons', surrounded by a fine garden, with gray-shingled walls and dormers picked out with Quakerish white, and trimmed bare vines climbing up to the very rooftree. Inside were the usual evidences of taste and wealth; floors carpeted to the baseboards, with handsome rugs here and there; books and flowers and Colonial fiddle-backed chairs; fires snapping in the cool afternoon, a great Belgian police dog walking out to greet her with dignity.

Mrs. Patterson was old, stout, in a gray silk dress that matched her curled short gray hair. She was in a sort of library, beside a wood fire; her only companion was a woman of perhaps forty, also gray, with a sick, patient face.

"Come in, come in," Mrs. Patterson said, as the maid ushered Tony to the door of the room. "It's Miss Taft, of the Call, Ruth," she said to the younger woman. The sick, troubled face flashed a smile that was almost as cheerless in effect as the anxious frown had been. "This is my daughter, Mrs. Bellamy," said Mrs. Patterson. "We're all going to the party tonight, so we thought we'd rest a little now."

"Exciting!" Tony said, smiling.

"What are they doing now, Miss Taft?"

"Well, some of the men are playing golf, and they're still playing tennis. But, of course, no more swimming; they had the diving and the races the very first, while the sun was out. And now a lot of them are playing bridge in the clubhouse, and they're having tea and cocktails."

"And a fancy dress tonight!" Ruth Bellamy said, shaking her head. "It's ridiculous! It's too much."

"Some of them are going back to San Francisco to dress and come back," Tony told her.

"Oh, how can they! That dreadful trip twice!"

"I go back tonight."

"Isn't the work of a newspaper office rather hard for a young girl like you?"

"It's wonderful," Tony laughed. Ruth Bellamy looked at her with a wistful smile.

"I can imagine it must be, if you felt well," she said.

"You don't look very sick," Tony said, with her kindly, disarming smile.

"I'm not sick, exactly—" Ruth began.

"No, she's not sick," her mother put in forcibly. "It's just that—that we've been rather sad lately."

Her eyes filled with tears; and Mrs Bellamy, looking at Tony, said steadily, "I lost my little boy seven months ago yesterday."

"Oh, no!" Tony ejaculated.

"We feel," Mrs. Patterson began gallantly, "that we must only thank God that we had seven wonderful years of him. He was nothing but happiness and sweetness, and his memory is only that. We're not going to let little Peter's name stand for anything but joy."

"I was ill—shock," Mrs. Bellamy explained, "and I just don't seem to—seem to get well."

Her lip trembled; she looked at the fire.

"I don't suppose one ever gets over anything like that," Tony said respectfully in her friendly way.

"Never!" Mrs. Bellamy said quickly.

They were having tea, a few minutes later, and talking along comfortably with that pleasure that is a part only of the beginning of friendship, when a voice from the hall said: "Mr. Benedict Arnold calling, madam!"

Mrs. Bellamy's face brightened, and she called out eagerly:

"Come in, Bibs!"

Immediately there stepped in from the hallway the most stunning figure of a man Tony had ever seen; a tall man, splendidly made, his height and figure and handsome face set off by the dashing costume and the ribboned periuke of the Revolutionary period. He wore a magnificent skirted coat of black brocade heavily embroidered in silver and steel, a waistcoat gay in flowers, plum-colored knee-breeches and silk stockings, buckled high-heeled shoes. At his throat and wrists were frills of fine lace; in his hand he carried a plumed cocked hat. She knew him: it was Lawrence Bellamy.

"Larry, you are marvelous!" said his wife.

"Oh, bravo!" said Mrs. Patterson.

"Come over here and meet Miss Taft, dear."

"Oh, Lord, I didn't know anyone was with you!" Benedict Arnold ejaculated. "Oh, say—" he stammered, Tony's hand in his. "well, hello—I didn't [illegible] you. You and I where have you and I talked to each other before?"

"In your office. Months ago."

"Oh sure, sure!" His face was brightening. "You were coming back; you didn't come back?"

"No. I got a job on the Call that very day, I think. Society editor."

"Good work," he said heartily. "Of course, I see it all, now. You've come over to do the High Jinks at the club. I knew we were putting up somebody, didn't ask. Who."

"And I've just placed you," Tony said smiling. "I've been talking to your wife and Mrs. Patterson here without ever thinking that the name was the same."

"Well—this is pleasant. No, no tea. I'm going upstairs and get out of this stuff; I just tried it on to see if it would fit and you all wouldn't think I looked like a perfect fool," said Lawrence Bellamy, as he stooped to kiss his wife's pale face, "and then I'll get myself something in the pantry, and then I'll join you ladies. What d'you think of it, Ruth?"

"It's simply stunning."

"This is one of the costumes from Arliss's 'Alexander Hamilton,'" the valet explained to Tony. "I was down there in Hollywood, a few weeks ago, and I borrowed this for me and a dandy for Ruth."

"And what do you go as, Mrs. Patterson?" Tony smiled at the elderly woman.

"For many years now," Mrs. Patterson said firmly, "I've worn a lace dress and put a mantilla on my head and a rose in my hair. No trouble, and thank God I can wear my own shoes and stays!"

"And you're going tonight, Ruth?" Lawrence asked, from the door.

"For a while, Larry—for the dinner, anyway."

"Ah, you're a sport!" he said.

When he came back, they talked for fifteen animated minutes before Tony rushed upstairs to get at her belated work, and she felt then, in the firelight, with their appreciative eyes upon her, that she was at her best; what she said sounded original and amusing, even to her, and when she got upstairs to the guest room and looked at herself in the mirror, she thought she looked her prettiest, too.

The guest room was as beautifully appointed as was the rest of the house. There was a small flat typewriter awaiting her on the gray-and-blue desk, and Tony settled down at once to work. When that was done she could study at her leisure the gray-and-blue carpet, the gray-and-blue curtains with a touch of pale apple blossom pink for relief here and there; the apple blossom bed, with a satin comforter of powder blue faced with gray. There were hangers padded in gray and blue in the closet, and fat bath towels heavily monogrammed in gray and blue crowded one another on the glass rods over the speckless tub. Violet soap. Tony adored violet soap—and nothing to do from quarter-past six until it was time to dress for a nine o'clock dinner. Oh, fun—fun—fun—

She took a luxurious bath, creamed her skin and brushed her hair, finally put on her wrapper and lay down, pulling the satin quilt up over her.

Tony was half asleep when there was a tap at her door.

"Come in!" she said, rousing. It was Ruth Bellamy who came in, hesitantly, with a somewhat doubtful smile on her face.

"It's after half-past seven, and you asked to be reminded?"

"Oh, yes. Oh, come in, Mrs. Bellamy! I believe I was dozing."

Ruth came in and sat on the bed.

"I had the most delicious bath, and then all those books, and I think I was nearly asleep.—Oh, how wonderful your hair is!"

"My wig?" Mrs. Bellamy's face had been artfully rouged and painted; with the silver curls above it, and the earrings of brilliants quivering when she moved her head, she looked ten years younger—fifteen years younger than the woman Tony had met downstairs a few hours ago. "Ridiculous what they can do!" she smiled deprecatingly. A dimple showed near the patch on her peachy cheek, and Tony thought that she saw for the first time what the handsome Mr. Bellamy might have seen in the much older Miss Patterson at the time of their marriage ten years ago.

Creamed Her Skin and Brushed Her Hair.

"It's very becoming!"

"It's too becoming. I don't look

DEER SEASON SUCCESSFUL IS CLAIM

DEPARTMENT POINTS TO NORMAL KILL OF BUCKS

Services Provided Hunters by Conservation Officers Success — Fewer Does Were Shot

Michigan's 1935 deer-hunting season, which came to a close November 30, is believed by state game and enforcement authorities to have been one of the most successful in recent years.

There were a normal kill of legal deer and far fewer does shot. The number of violations as well as the number of hunting casualties are believed to have been below average. In addition the cooperation given by an overwhelming majority of the estimated 85,000 hunters, betokened a progressive interest in problems which have to do with the maintenance of the deer herd and continued good hunting.

"Innovations worked out by state authorities proved so successful as to warrant adoption. The "messenger" service tried out proved of help to several hunters; high-frequency, short-wave radio sets assisted materially in law enforcement in areas of large hunter concentration and the permit system arranged between Conservation Department authorities of Michigan and Wisconsin helped approximately 600 sportsmen who transported deer across the Wisconsin state line.

"After checking every available source of information, we are convinced that the total kill of legal deer in Michigan during the 1935 open season approximated that of the 1934 season, which undoubtedly was one of the largest on record," said H. R. Sayre, chief of law enforcement and field administration for the Department of Conservation. "Many individuals have commented freely to the effect that the total kill was far short of last year. We have no reason to believe that this was the case; instead every indication is that the kill was about equal to that of 1934."

The number of buck deer carried by state ferries across the Straits of Mackinac from the Upper Peninsula and the number of deer moved by state ferry from Drummond Island are considered good indications of the possible total kill of legal deer each year north of the Straits.

"This year 4,790 deer were ferried from St. Ignace to Mackinaw City; last year the total was 5,150. This year state ferries took 342 deer from Drummond Island; last year, 344. The number of hunters going to Drummond Island by ferry this year was 969; last year, 758.

"News accounts this season consistently called attention to the number of bucks crossing the Straits," Mr. Sayre remarked. "The total did fall short of last year, but that figure alone cannot be accepted as a complete record.

"For years deer hunters who bagged bucks in the western part of the Upper Peninsula necessarily have been hampered by Wisconsin authorities in attempting to transport the deer across the state line. Wisconsin enforcement men never knew positively that the deer were not shot in their state.

"In an effort to correct this condition and facilitate the transportation of deer for sportsmen this season, an arrangement was agreed to with Wisconsin game authorities to allow the movement of Michigan deer under permits. Conservation posts in the western part of the Upper Peninsula granted permits to approximately 500 hunters this season to carry deer into Wisconsin. These permits were recognized by Wisconsin authorities. We conservatively estimate that at least half that number of deer otherwise would have been moved south by way of the Straits and by adding 250 to the Straits tally we have a total approximately equal to the tally of last year. But, of course, this tally is at best only an indication."

The "messenger" service, the permit arrangement with the State of Wisconsin and the use of field radios in enforcement patrol work have proved of sufficient benefit during the season to warrant their continuance next year, Snyre stated.

OPERATORS' LICENSES HAVE BEEN REFUSED

Failure to State Former Driving Record Given As Principal Reason

The following information received from Wright G. Needham, executive secretary of the Michigan Safety and Traffic Directors Association, is published for the information which it contains which is of value to all automobile owners.

"Of late, a great many applications for operators' licenses have been rejected and in a goodly number of instances, prosecutions for perjury have been instigated because the applicant had failed to state a former driving record on the application.

"It is very evident that too few of our motorists realize that under the statute making drivers' licenses compulsory, that he must state whether or not he has been convicted of any offense pertaining to traffic prior to making application for license. Section 23 of Act No. 91, P. A. 1931, reads as follows:

"'Any person who shall make any false affidavit or shall knowingly swear or affirm falsely, to any matter or thing required by the terms of this Act to be sworn to or affirmed, shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction shall be punishable by fine or imprisonment as other person committing perjury are punishable.'

"It is found that in a great many instances, through lack of proper cooperation on the part of notaries throughout the state, before whom these oaths are taken, that prosecution are feasible because of the fact that too few of the motories actually swear the applicant, make him take off his hat and raise his right hand, as prescribed by law. But, remember this, Mr. Driver, whether or not the notary fails to properly execute his duty in this regard, your application will be rejected if the records on file in the Lansing offices show that you have been convicted for traffic violations prior to making application. It might also be well to state that drastic action is contemplated by the executive offices toward revoking commission of notaries found to be failing to comply in this regard."

MILLIONTH CAR TO BE GIFT TO OWNER OLDEST CHEVROLET

Chevrolet's one millionth car of 1935 production is to be presented to the owner of the oldest Chevrolet licensed and in regular use in the United States, A. E. Eachtman, of Charlevoix Chevrolet Co., report that he and other dealers in the locality have been asked to discover whether the oldest Chevrolet is in this territory.

The one millionth Chevrolet built within the current year came off the assembly line at Flint, Mich., on December 12, just eight days after Chevrolet produced its eleven millionth car since the beginning of the company.

Presentation of the millionth car of the year—a 1936 Standard coach will be made to the owner whose Chevrolet is discovered, between December 16, 1935, and midnight January 15, 1936, to be the oldest model licensed and in regular service.

It is specified that, to win, the additioner Chevrolet must have been regularly licensed for operation during the current year, possessing its own 1935 license tags issued before December 1. It must, also, have been licensed as a passenger car, and be equipped with a complete passenger car body. It must bear the original engine and chassis numbers, legible and unaltered.

To enter a Chevrolet for consideration, the owner need only drive it to any Chevrolet dealer's salesroom and submit it for examination, receiving a blank on which he will report the engine and chassis numbers of the car to the Chevrolet Motor Company at Detroit, where the company's records will determine which is the very oldest in service.

W. E. Holler, vice president and general sales manager, in notifying dealers of the search for the oldest car, said that the presentation is intended as a New Year's gift as a reward for the driver whose good care and maintenance has enabled the very oldest Chevrolet to survive after many years of operation.

"Chevrolet is happy to present this 1936 model," said Mr. Holler, "because it feel that some recognition is due the owners of Chevrolets. Our achievement of a production totalling well over a million cars during the current year is to be credited largely to motorists who began purchasing Chevrolets years ago and have placed many repeat orders since then."

"I wish that I could have the thrill that is in store for the owner whose early Chevrolet—a car maybe 15 or 18 years old—will be supplanted by a 1936 model."

Although the presentation will be made as a New Year's gift, the time for submitting cars for consideration has been extended, to include January 15, because of the short period between December 12, the birthday of the millionth car of the year, and the first of the year. Announcement of the award will be made on or about January 22 as soon as the records can be carefully studied to determine exactly who has the oldest Chevrolet in active service.

FARM DEBT ADJUSTMENT GROUP FORMED

Officer for Charlevoix County Committee Are Named

Confirmation of the appointment of Sabin Hooper, Boyne City, as secretary, Wesley Dillworth, Boyne City, chairman, and C. B. Bice, Charlevoix, as a county Farm Debt Adjustment Committee to assist in the federally supervised Debt Adjustment Service was received from R. I. Nowell, regional director of the Resettlement Administration at Madison, Wisconsin, this week.

The above members of the Charlevoix County Farm Debt Adjustment Committee have agreed to offer their services without cost to worthy farmers who have debt problems.

In general, the debt problems of farmers are of two kinds; First, those where the debt load is not excessive but must be refinanced; second, where the debt load spells insolvency and loss of the farmer's chance to make an independent living for himself and his family.

The Resettlement Administration can not itself refinance farmer's real estate indebtedness but where the debt load is not excessive, it will help the farmer to secure refinancing through other, independent agencies. The farmer facing insolvency will find the County Farm Debt Adjustment Committee willing to act as a voluntary mediation board, attempting an impartial adjustment of his indebtedness to an amount which he can carry and which will be fair to the creditor.

Where a farmer makes written application for their services the local Debt Adjustment Committee will study his financial situation, suggest what should be done and assist him in solving his debt problems.

Blank forms for making application for this service may be obtained at the office of the county agent, the County Rural Resettlement Supervisor or from any of the above named members of the Charlevoix County Farm Debt Adjustment Committee.

Christmas Eve Dinners

Christmas Eve! Was there ever a more thrilling, expectant night? A joyous atmosphere seems to be everywhere—a universal spirit of camaraderie—all joining to make this one of the most cheerful occasions of the whole year. But there's always the question of what to serve on this night of nights — with the pompous gobbler stuffed and reposing in his roaster—the pick of the vegetable kingdom prepared for the morrow—the rows of pies, puddings and breads that every kitchen boasts, still the thought occurs, "What shall I serve tonight that will not detract from tomorrow's dinner?"

It must be a menu including the favorites of the children, for even the eyes of the most excited child will dance and sparkle even brighter when his favorite Raisin Bread—and pudding is set before him!

In our home, we make as much of an occasion of Christmas Eve dinner as we do the Christmas feast. There are always surprises — though the menu is plain. I'm listing for you several of my own Christmas Eve dinner menus—planned for our own family of four:

MENU NO. I
Lamb Chops Deluxe
Horseradish Stuffing
French Fried Sweet Potatoes
Buttered Peas
Raisin Bread French Rolls

MY BOYHOOD CHRISTMAS TREE

Let me turn back to my youthful days,
Let me have Christmas, with olden ways;
I would like Father and Mother to see
My beautiful boyhood Christmas tree.

I would like Sister, Sonny and wife
Who have ended this stormy earthly life,
To gather round and dance with glee,
Under my boyhood Christmas tree.

There it stands all lighted with candles,
Laden with toys that jingle and dangles.
Oh! for just one moment to be Near that boyhood Christmas tree.

See the trimmings, of pop corn and cranberries red,
Strung by Mother on a long white thread;
A doll for Sis, a train for me,
All hung on that boyhood Christmas tree.

Thank you, Father and Mother, for the days so dear,
Wishing good for you with very much cheer,
Hoping that you, through memory, can see
My beautiful boyhood Christmas tree.

say any more," the other woman said, shaking her head. "But this is what I came in about," she went on; "Mother and I were saying that that dance you're going, and this is a dance, would you like us to hunt up a costume?"

Tony pounced and Ruth turned her head to see the gay full skirt of the Portuguese costume, the embroidered corset and bright headdress dangling in bangers at the dressing table.

"It's the real thing; my brother had a friend who had to go to Rio," Tony explained as the other woman adjusted it. "And he brought it home for Brenda. But—it was always rather big for Brenda, so I wear it."

Tony put her coat on the floor, went to the dressing table, and picked up a brush. She looked at her hostess in the mirror.

"You're not going to have much fun, are you?" she asked soberly, in sudden understanding.

Mrs. Bellamy, lingering, seated herself beside the almost dead fire.

"I try to be."

"Was the little boy—was Peter—sick very long?" Tony was standing opposite her hostess now, brushing her thick dark hair.

"He was Ted."

"Ah-h-h!"

"He was at a friend's house playing with little Dick Sykes. They were in the garage."

"How—how terrible for you!"

It was terrible for my husband, too. He loved Ted, off Peter."

"Perhaps," Tony said timidly, "it would be better if you did."

"Peter was the only one. You see, I was ill six times, and Larry only 'wanted' me when we married," Mrs. Bellamy went on suddenly.

"You look lovely—one tonight," Tony ventured after a while.

The other woman got to her feet, and laid a hand on Tony's shoulder.

"Come and see me again," she said wistfully, shyly. "When you are over on this side of the bay, or any time. I'd be so glad of it. I've been living very quietly — too quietly. It isn't good for Mother and for me, and it isn't good for Larry. I'd be so glad if you would."

"I will!" Tony promised, touched. But as she got herself into the becoming stripes and colors, she wondered if she would. Life was brimful without the Bellamys!

CHAPTER IX

Two weeks later the Bellamys came over to the city for a few weeks to stay at the Fairmont Hotel, and Tony was almost immediately asked by her new friend to come up and have tea with her. She had a thoroughly pleasant hour with the mother and daughter, enjoying the luxury of the big corner suite, and the hot tea, and the sense that she was liked and admired. After that she went in two or three times a week.

Once Brenda went with her, and Ruth and Mrs. Patterson liked Brenda too; they both made it a point to go, like Mr. Larry, and buy books from Tony's charming sister. And at Christmas time Tony had beautiful presents.

The Bellamys, remembering happier Christmases that a noisy little boy had made complete, went to Havana. But they left their gifts behind them; there were flowers for Aunt Meggy, there was a lovely scarf for Brenda, and for Tony herself there were frail delicate underthings from Ruth, a book from Larry, and a handsome coat from "her attached old friend Harriet Patterson."

She went up to thank them as soon as they came back and found Ruth alone. It was a dark, foggy January afternoon and Tony was glad to get warm and to give all her Christmas news over her teacup, and get all of Ruth's in return. Ruth looked better than Tony had ever seen her; she had a good color and seemed in fine spirits, and she quite simply laid some of the improvement to Tony herself.

"You've been extremely good for me, my dear. Both Mother and Larry see it. A daughter couldn't have been sweeter."

"I've done nothing; you make me ashamed!" Tony protested.

"I'm fond of you. I don't get fond of many persons," Ruth said with her pathetic smile.

Lawrence Bellamy was not always at the hotel for the tea parties that his wife so much enjoyed, but he came in once or twice, and was always glad to find Tony there. Sometimes they discussed the personnel of the Call office; he knew all the important men there, and was inexhaustibly interested in what went on.

"Boo, that horrible Fitch! He came to dinner one night. I hate him!" Ruth said. "Do you know him, Tony?"

"Oh, yes." She smiled dreamily. "And Bessie Cutter, too," she said.

"I suppose everyone in the office is on to that," Ruth observed.

"She did a column called 'Bessie Saw It,' for a while. Now they say she's going to do some work for the Sunday issue."

"Can she do anything?"

"Not really. She's been tried out almost everywhere." Tony had a moment of pity for Bessie. Not much fun ahead of her. Everyone said that Frank Fitch was cooling. She could sell her diamonds, maybe."

"The Fitches came to our house for dinner one night," Ruth said. "And she's a sweet little thing."

When Larry went to dress for some business dinner, Ruth said thoughtfully:

"One wonders that Larry doesn't see some attractive woman; they all like him! And after all, I'm twelve years older than he is."

Tony had not known them very long before she had heard and divined much of the story of Ruth's life. Ruth had been an heiress; her Patterson grandfather had been a banker, a financial genius, one of the big figures in New York immediately after the close of the Civil war, and he had left her, or rather had left his son, Ruth's father, a considerable fortune. In the Piedmont house, which Tony gathered belonged to Mrs. Patterson, were paintings of Ruth as a little girl of ten, and one of her with her horse; photographs of Ruth in a school graduation dress, in a ball gown, on shipboard, at the Deauville races. Tony gathered that the thing lacking to Ruth in those years had been normal companionship with her own kind; any interested young man had been naturally considered a fortune hunter. She had not married. She had gone in for breeding "show" horses, for tennis, and a good deal for society in New York, London, and Paris.

Then, when Ruth had been thirty, a New York financial paper had wanted to see Grandfather Patterson's letters and diaries, to use in a series of articles about the New York of his time, and the promising young journalist, little more than a year out of Harvard, who had been sent out to Patterson manor farm on Long Island had been Lawrence Bellamy. Lawrence had been young and gay; Ruth impressive in her wealth and position at thirty-one. He had imagined that many suitors were interested; presently he had found himself installed as the only one, her squire when she went into town to the opera, and incidentally to the Patterson box; her authority on the problems presented by managing the manor farm; there were splendid dairies, calves, colts, stallions, hunters, and racers. Lawrence grew interested. They were married, and Ruth had a few years of flawless happiness, had a small square son to stamp about "Merrivale Hills," could drive about to other estates like theirs, and show other women how fortunate she was.

Lawrence had continued in newspaper work, refusing to give up the career that interested him to become a rich woman's husband, and as his star had begun to rise, somehow—Tony sensed—Ruth's had begun to fall. First there had been money loss, a great theft of it, and the sale of Merrivale Hills, and then failing health. Through them Ruth had clung all the more tenaciously to her wonderful husband and son. They had come the San Francisco venture, and the beautiful house in Piedmont, with Lawrence growing handsomer and cleverer and more successful every day, and the Journal promising to be a success. Ruth had been forty-two then, to his eager, vital thirty.

But nothing had been really disturbing, nothing had forced upon her the realization of their changing positions until little Peter's death. That had brought her house of cards down about her ears with a shattering crash; there could be no more illusions, no more hopes. She had sunk, within a few short weeks, into the shrinking, nervous condition in which Tony first had sought her. She had left herself the elderly, childless wife of a rising and brilliant man, and not all his kindly matter-of-fact affection, and not all her mother's anxious spoiling and loving, could seem to save her.

"Happiness is absolutely relative, Bendy," the more thoughtful Tony once said to her sister. "I see it more and more every day. There's no use trying to estimate whether persons are happy or not; you can't tell until you know what they're comparing it to. Ruth has so much less than she used to have that she's almost in melancholia. We have so much more than we ever thought we'd have that we can hardly keep our feet on the ground. And yet even now we haven't one tenth—I mean in actual income and position and possessions—of what the Bellamys have."

"And feeling so much older than he. If she were thirty-two instead of forty-two I suppose there might be another child; as it is I don't think there's any hope of it."

"He's—how old?"

"About thirty-one or -two, I think."

"Ten years. You three run in neat decades," said Brenda.

"That's true. 'Good gracious, is she twenty years older than I am!'" Tony murmured, under her breath.

"I like her liking me," Tony answered, after a moment's thought, in honesty that surprised even herself. "I don't mean that!" she said laughing. "I do like her—you have to like Ruth, she's so generous and kind and all that. But of course she's not the personality that Larry is."

"Oh, Tony, you're so beautiful, so firm and young and glowing and happy—have mercy on her!" Brenda thought. But aloud she dared say nothing. She could only console herself with the prayer that it was purely her imagination that of late Tony was spoiling Larry Bellamy with a new attentiveness, that Larry was managing to be at home when Tony was there. "If only they'd move back to Piedmont, where they belong," Brenda thought irrationally.

But far from returning to Piedmont, the Bellamys rented an apartment on the Summit of the California street panorama; a cool apartment with a wonderful view of the city, and determined to remain in San Francisco.

On a certain rainy March afternoon, with the freedom of a favored friend, she went up there unannounced, gave Chevalier her wet macintosh and dripping umbrella, and entered the living room to find a fire blazing and Lawrence reading galley proofs in a deep chair beside it.

"Nooo. I had some work to do, and I thought I might as well do it here."

"Ruth?"

"At a bridge lunch somewhere. She'll be in. She said to be sure to keep you if you came in."

"Oh-h-h-h!" Tony shuddered luxuriously. "I'm on a story, but the woman is right up the street here at the Fairmont, and she won't be home until six."

"Then you're here until six?" Larry said, with a glance at the clock.

"The truth is," Tony said, her cheeks bright from the windy climb up the hill, "the truth is, I'm glad to see you alone for a minute, for I'm in a fight corner."

Tony settled herself in a chair, her brown silky hands extended on the arms, her glowing blue eyes sometimes turning to his, sometimes to the fire.

"Well it's Greenwood, our city editor," she said.

"What's Greeny want now? Making love to you?"

"Making love to me? Hear him! He wants me to do a sensational story for him about the Emergency hospital. He wants me to walk out into Market street, with no money in my purse, and no cards of identification on me, and faint."

Lawrence was shaking his head slowly.

"Greeny's old-fashioned," he said. "That sort of thing isn't journalism"

HONEY CAN BE USED TO MAKE FINE FOODS

Bulletin Gives Recipes for Baked Goods, Salads and Candies

Michigan honey can be used in baked goods, candy, canned goods, salads, desserts, and drinks to replace part or all of the sugar ordinarily called for in the recipes, according to the home economic department at Michigan State College.

A delicious candy can be made entirely from farm products. Cut pieces of apple and simmer them in honey until the pieces are clear, then remove and roll in chopped nuts. The pieces also can be rolled in cocoanut or can be coated with chocolate.

Honey biller-wet is more difficult to make but rewards the patience of those who master the art. Place a section of comb honey in the refrigerator for 24 hours, then cut into pieces three-fourths inch long and three-eighths inch wide. Place the pieces on waxed paper on trays and chill for 30 minutes. Prepare chocolate for dipping and keep it over water at a temperature of not over 120 degrees. Dip the pieces of honey and drop a nut meat on each piece. The children will save any pieces which are not coated thickly enough to keep the honey from dripping.

Honey is about one-fifth water so the amount of water called for by the recipe should be reduced by one-fifth for every cupful of honey used to replace sugar. Each tablespoonful of honey supplies from 65 to 100 calories. It is easily digested, is slightly laxative, and contains a small amount of minerals.

Extension Bulletin No. 150 contains many recipes for the use of honey. This will be sent to anyone requesting it from the Bulletin Clerk of East Lansing.

NEW ICE FISHING LAWS EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1ST

Michigan's new ice fishing regulations for inland waters, which have been the subject of controversy in sportsmen's circles all go into effect throughout the state January 1.

The new regulations limit the inland lake fisherman to the use of two ice-lines with not more than one hook attached to each line and require that these lines be held in the hand or under immediate control.

The regulation also apply to the "tip-up" or any similar mechanical device used for the taking of fish from the inland waters. No more than two "tip-ups" may be used by an individual fisherman and these must be under immediate control.

There is one exception to these regulations, explained Fred A. Westerman, chief of Michigan's fisheries operations. Smelt fishermen in recognized smelt waters are also restricted to the use of two lines, but may use any number of hook on a line.

The two ice-line regulations, however, do not apply to the Great Lakes or connecting waters of the Great Lakes where five ice-lines, the number allowed last winter, is still legal.

WINTER QUEEN CONTEST TUESDAY NIGHT

FOURTEEN GIRLS COMPETE FOR HONOR AT GYM

Selection by Popular Vote; Coronation Friday, January 10, and Winter Carnival January 25th

Following completion of details by various committees, Charlevoix's pending winter sports activities have taken definite shape and are ready for announcement.

The first event will be the winter queen contest, to be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, January 7th, at the gymnasium.

Out of a group of 17 girls selected by a committee and approved by various civic organizations to compete for the honor of Charlevoix winter queen, 14 have consented to become candidates. The winner will represent this city in the regional contest for Michigan winter queen at Petoskey. The candidates are: Frances Marshall, Byrnece Lamphear, Billie Smith, Marie Novak, Jean Graves, Hilda Roen, Iva Howe, Bobbie Bedford, Marjorie Miller, Alice Meyers, Shirley Partridge, Frances Withers, Esther Lou Fachtman and Ernestine Chew.

At the queen's contest the group will be directed by Miss Freda McMillan and Ruth Anne Dowd in a formal scene and winter scene to be enacted on the gymnasium stage, giving the candidates an opportunity to speak and otherwise make themselves acquainted to the audience. Admission tickets for adults will be accompanied by two ballots. Following presentation the first ballot will be taken, eliminating all but three. The contestant receiving the highest vote among the three survivors on the second ballot will be honored as Winter Queen, and as an additional reward will receive a complete winter sports costume. The two runners-up will act as maids of honor.

Other features of the queen contest program will include movies of winter sports at Petoskey and other places, also several educational talkies to be shown with the school's new movie equipment. An admission of 25 cents and 10 cents will be charged. Only adults will be qualified to vote.

The coronation ceremony, an outdoor affair for which elaborate preparations are being made by a committee headed by Charles H. Emrey, will precede a winter sports ball to be held at the gymnasium the evening of Friday, January 10th. Further details of this event will be announced when available.

Plans for a one-day winter carnival of sports events to be held January 25th, are also being made.

KIWANIS OFFICERS FOR 1936 INSTALLED TUESDAY

Robert Bridge President of Organization for Ensuing Year

The bell and gavel were turned over to Robert Bridge, newly elected president. Other officers for the ensuing year are: Vice-president, Dr. F. F. McMillan; secretary, William F. Meyers; treasurer, Harley I. Ochs.

As a token of appreciation for his efforts during the past year, O. P. North, retiring president, was presented with a past president's pin.

Hi girls! Here's your opportunity! It's Leap Year and a free marriage license is awaiting the first fair damsel who makes application from County Clerk Fenton R. Bulow and admits she "put the proposition."

Perhaps Clerk Bulow had as his motive for this generous offer an effort to boost marriages in the county, for Cupid's activities fell off badly during 1935. Records show 105 licenses were issued during the past year, compared with 138 during 1934. Something should be done.

And what is even more alarming, divorces gained as marriages dropped off. There were 37 decrees granted last year, whereas in 1934 there were 31.

From the records of the city clerk comes the information that births showed a decided gain. During 1935 there were 62 as compared to 54 in 1934. Deaths increased also, records showing 46 in 1935, an increase of two over 1934.

FRESHMAN COLLEGE PLAN IS ABANDONED

Deem Requirements Too Rigid — U. of M. May Offer Course

Due to rigid requirements necessary for establishment, plans for a Freshman College unit in Charlevoix have been definitely abandoned.

After considering the impossibility of obtaining the required minimum of 35 students and in view of the fact college credit would be given only those on welfare, establishment of the college was deemed not only impossible, but inadvisable.

However, the University of Michigan, under whose jurisdiction Charlevoix is listed, is considering the establishment of correspondence courses in cities not having a Freshman College. If ten or more students register for the course, a resident tutor will be placed in the community.

Further information will be given as soon as available.

EARL SHAPTON CANDIDATE OFFICE CITY TREASURER

Heralding the approach of the city primary election in March, Earl Shapton has announced his candidacy on the Republican ticket for the office of City treasurer. Mr. Shapton's is the first announcement made public.

ORGANIZE RECREATIONAL PROGRAM

BASEBALL LEAGUE IN ACTION THURSDAY NIGHT

Five Teams Will Compete In Loop; Organize for Basketball at Meeting Friday Night

An indoor recreational program, under WPA supervision, will be inaugurated at the high school gymnasium Thursday evening, January 2, according to Ray Kipke, director.

An indoor baseball league of five teams has been organized. The teams and captains are: Bronkos, Lyle Beaudoin; Lions, Vic Smith; Eagles, Harold Hallett; Giants, Gordon "Doc" Todd; Pirates, George Haggard. According to the present schedule, series baseball games will be played Tuesday and Thursday evenings, concluding January 21st, when the schedule will be reorganized and play repeated.

Games scheduled for Thursday evening follow: 7:15, Bronkos vs. Lions; 8:15, Eagles vs. Giants. Games for Tuesday, January 7, are: 7:15, Lions vs. Eagles; 8:15, Pirates vs. Bronkos.

Organization of a basketball league is planned for Friday evening, January 3. Those interested in joining league teams are requested to be present at that time. Following organization, basketball games will be played Monday and Wednesday evenings.

Mr. Kipke announced that on Wednesday evenings following basketball, the gymnasium will be available to older men for baseball and volley ball, providing there is sufficient interest.

Assisting Mr. Kipke in direction of the program will be George Richardson in basketball, and Lynn Sheldon in baseball.

PLAY AT METHODIST CHURCH A SUCCESS

Performance Given by Home Talent Receives Favorable Comment

The presentation of the beautiful play, "The Passing of the Third Floor, Back," last Thursday evening at the Methodist church, was a highly artistic success in every way, and carried also a fine moral lesson.

The scenes were laid in a cheap boarding house in a large city, where there was an odd collection of characters who spent most of their time gossiping and bickering. A very unusual stranger finally came and took the cheapest room in the house, and mingled with the boarders, bringing a strange influence of quiet, and friendliness and kind consideration. He was a mystery — no one could learn from whence he came, and finally he mysteriously disappeared, but not until his fine spirit had transformed the spirit and attitudes of the whole group.

The work was directed by Mrs. Dowd, and represented about the finest piece of work she has done in this city. There were twelve actors. These cannot be mentioned separately, but all the work was of a very high grade.

HOSPITAL IS SEEKING BLOOD DONORS

TRANSFUSION EQUIPMENT IS NOW AVAILABLE

Standing List of Eligibles Sought to Provide for Emergencies Which May Arise in Future

Following the announcement last week that equipment had been installed at Charlevoix Hospital for blood transfusion, Dr. Gilbert Saltonstall has prepared the following article, making an appeal for donors in order that a standing list of eligibles may be obtained. The article follows:

"Blood transfusion under present day methods and with modern equipment has become a most important and necessary part of medical treatment. Often a transfusion in certain conditions means the saving of a human life or a hastening of convalescence and cure. As human blood is divided into four main types, in order to secure satisfactory results the blood type of the patient and the donor person who gives the blood must be carefully matched and tested to determine if the transfusion will be successful. Also it is important to be sure that the blood of the donor is free from disease before it is transfused into another person's bloodstream.

"Since a transfusion is often an emergency measure and no time must be lost in securing a blood donor, most hospitals endeavor to establish what is called a 'donor list' of healthy adults who have had their blood examined and classified as to type and purity. When a transfusion is needed in an emergency and when the patient's relatives are not of suitable blood type, a donor is selected from the list whose blood will match and he is paid according to the amount of blood given, usually $15 or $20.

"The Charlevoix Hospital is now equipped for the transfusion of blood and is willing to test and type the blood of any healthy resident between the ages of 21 and 40 and over 140 pounds in weight free of charge and if suitable place them upon its donor list. Anyone who meets the requirements may leave their name and address with the Superintendent of the Charlevoix Hospital."

GAME LAW VIOLATIONS 500 DURING NOVEMBER

Large Portion Were Infractions of State's Deer Laws

Nearly 500 arrests were made by Conservation officers during November, the month of the deer-hunting season in Michigan. The total—482—is six under the figure of November, 1934.

A large part of the total arrests this year — aggregating 168 — is chargeable to violations of the deer laws. Twenty-seven were made for illegal fishing and nearly all of the remainder for illegal trapping or illegal hunting of small-game.

EAST JORDAN MEN ARE IN JAIL HERE FOR ASSAULT

Henry Reinhart, 20, and Edwin Wood, 32, both of East Jordan, are serving terms of 60 and 30 days, respectively, in the county jail for assault on George Kaake, a neighbor.

Justice H. C. Blount, who passed sentence, also assessed fines of $30 each, stipulating that failure to pay would add another 30 days to the jail sentence.

STATE TO END YEAR WITH CASH BALANCE

WIPE OUT HUGE DEFICIT IN PAST 12 MONTHS

Report Municipalities and Schools In Better Financial Condition As 1935 Passes On

A year which was ushered in amid tragedy, political strife and financial woes came to a conclusion today with the state's position better as the result of 1935 having taken its place in history.

The state government will end the year with a bank balance of almost $2,000,000 compared with the deficit of $6,500,000 which was shown 12 months ago. Bonded indebtedness has been cut $6,000,000.

Municipalities and school districts which were in a dire financial straits at the close of 1931 also have improved their position and there are only few instances today where schools face the possibility of closing their doors before the end of the educational year.

The year saw the end of the dole as a federal function which originated in the depths of the depression and for 1936 public welfare officials aimed to see every person capable of employment drawing an earned pay check. The tremendous relief load the public has carried for the past several years declined materially during 1935.

The state's industrial payrolls during the past year were one-third larger than those of 1934. Food costs were 13 per cent higher and Michigan farmers received 12 per cent more in cash for their crops than they did in 1934. The total value of farm produce in the state this year was $169,000,000.

The State Highway Department, performing an important function in the federal re-employment program, had the busiest year in its history, spending $18,475,000 on 693 miles of road. The funds for the most part were furnished by the federal government.

STATE PLANS ACQUIRE ADDITIONAL DEER YARDS

Vote $200,000 of License Receipts As Provided by Legislature

Purchase by the Department of Conservation of additional deer-yard areas in the northern part of the state, is being planned with a $200,000 fund expected to be available by the first of the year.

The fund is formed of the receipts of deer-hunting licenses, $1.50 of each license having been ear-marked by legislative act for deer-yard purchases. The State Administrative Board released $100,000 of this money last summer and of that amount $30,000 was spent for land purchases. The recent deer-hunting season is expected to make $130,000 additional available, forming a probable total of $200,000.

RECREATION CLASSES OPEN MONDAY NIGHT

Manual Training Room Available — Number Depends On Enrollment

Several classes in the WPA recreational program will hold their initial meeting Monday evening, January 6, in the high school building.

The manual training room will be available for those wishing to make use of the equipment and instruction provided. The number of other classes will depend entirely upon the enrollment.

EXTENSIVE REPAIR PROGRAM AT SCHOOL

Plaster Repairs, Interior Decorating Is Now Under Way

In anticipation and preparation for a WPA repair project for the public schools, approval of which is expected daily, considerable work is now in progress during the vacation period.

In the grade building all plaster cracks are being repaired. Walls and ceilings are being treated in preparation for painting and glazing. The lower portions will be tiled.

When the project is approved, work listed includes repair, smoothing, painting and starching of walls, a covering which will last 10 to 15 years. Six rooms unfinished in the FERA program will be plastered and all floors sanded. The basement corridor will be plastered and textured, unfinished floor in the high school building completed and walls plastered. Other improvements include extension of the gymnasium stage over the basement stairway, extension of the manual training room and painting of the high school exterior to match the gymnasium.

Work was started at the present time, according to Supt. O. P. North, in order that preliminary work which would interfere with classes could be completed during the vacation period.

RECREATIONAL FIELD WORK PROGRESSING

EXCAVATION FOR TRACKS HAS BEEN COMPLETED

Concrete Curbing Poured Last Week, Trees Set Out—Completion Will Provide Fine Athletic Field

The south side recreational field, a WPA project sponsored by the board of education, is rapidly taking shape.

Excavation for the half-mile oval and the 440-yard straight track has been completed and the concrete curbing poured. The excavation will be filled with stone and covered with five inches of cinders. The tracks are a duplicate in specifications of those at Michigan State College.

Other work completed includes setting of trees along Carpenter avenue and the west side of the field.

When the project is completed the recreation field will provide two concrete tennis courts, a regulation baseball field, two soft ball diamonds, two outdoor basketball courts, four shuffle board courts, four horseshoe courts, a children's playground, fenced in on the street side, portable bleachers.

It is possible portable flood lights will be installed, also a depression 250 x 400 feet made at the southeast corner for an ice skating rink. Roadways and walks and stone entrance gates to the field are included in the plans.

Completion of the project will give Charlevoix one of the most complete athletic fields in Northern Michigan.

TRAPPERS MAY SELL FURS AT ANY TIME

Must Notify Conservation Dept. Kind and Number Furs, However

As long as they have notified the Department of Conservation as to the kind and quantity of pelts in their possession, they may hold such pelts indefinitely in anticipation of better market prices.

"Many trappers seem to think that they must sell pelts in their possession within five days after the close of the respective trapping seasons," said H. R. Sayre, chief of conservation law enforcement. "That is not true."

"The law says that within five days after the close of the trapping season, individuals having furs must notify the Department as to the kind and quantity of those furs as of the last day of the season. If that requirement has been complied with, the trapper is free to hold the furs as long as he wishes."

DISCONTINUE REGISTRATION SERVICES HERE

According to Edward C. Schneider, district manager, registration service conducted each Monday by the National Re-employment Service in the WPA office in this city will be discontinued on December 30. After that date persons desiring to register will call at the National Re-employment office, located in the court house at Petoskey.

RAYDERS DIVIDE COURT CONTESTS

LOST TO PETOSKEY; WIN FIRST FROM BOYNE

Team Idle Until January 10 When Schedule Calls for Contest at Harbor Springs

Friday night Petoskey's Northmen secured their second win of the season over the Raylers, 22 to 15, and Tuesday night Charlevoix broke into the winning column for the first time with a 21 to 11 victory over Boyne City.

The Petoskey game was a rough-and-tumble affair with the winner taking advantage of their greater height to score most of their points by tip-ins from beneath the basket. Charlevoix led at the quarter 5 and 3, but at the half the advantage was Petoskey's by an 11 and 8 margin. Both teams tallied five points in the third stanza, but in the fourth Petoskey outdistanced the Rayders badly.

Dombroski was high for the visitors with seven. Carey, Schwab and Pearl divided Charlevoix's scoring with four points each. Both teams missed many from the foul line, Charlevoix making good on but three of 11 chances, while Petoskey made four out of 12.

Beat Boyne Handily

Charlevoix won handily from Boyne City in Tuesday night's contest. Taking an early lead, the Rayders increased their margin with every period for a 21 to 11 victory. Pearl and Radle led the scoring, the former accounting for 10 points and Radle four goals for eight points. Davis and Snyder were best for the visitors with four each.

Charlevoix reserves won the preliminary contest by a close 19 to 18 score.

Conference Standings

Charlevoix's win over Boyne gave them an even split in conference games for the season. The conference standing to date follows:

Large Attendance at Party at Gymnasium Tuesday Evening

A large crowd enjoyed the second annual charity ball given Tuesday evening at the high school gymnasium under sponsorship of the PTA.

STATE WILL ENFORCE NEW TRAILER LAWS

Stringent Highway Regulations Went Into Effect on January 1

Beginning January 1, the Michigan State Police will enforce all provisions of the state trailer law, it was announced by Capt. Laurence A. Lyon, superintendent of the uniform division.

A general bulletin has been issued to all members of the force to impound trucks and trailers with overall length of more than 50 feet. The law also prohibits the operation of more than one four wheeled trailer and requires that trailers with a gross weight of more than 3,000 pounds be equipped with power brakes.

Captain Lyon says this measure, when enforced, will affect a large number of trucks on the road. "We have given the owners a year to change over their equipment, and now we mean business," he declared.

PLAN NEW PROGRAMS FOR RADIO STATION

WKAR to Be On Air More Hours—To Change Wave Length

A greater service to the people of Michigan has been made possible from radio station WKAR by the Federal Communications Commission granting an increased number of daylight operating hours and of permission to change the frequency assignment. The change in frequency will not be made until after January 14, but the program changes will be made immediately. The new frequency will be 850 kilocycles.

Headlining the new programs, Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald will speak each Friday at 4:45 p. m. In this "Governor's Hour," Gov. Fitzgerald will discuss affairs of state government of interest to all the people of Michigan. The Department of State will broadcast messages in connection with the statewide safety campaign with Orville Atwood, secretary of state, as the first speaker on January 10. The State Department of Public Instruction will conduct a teacher's hour each Tuesday. Dr. Eugene B. Elliott, state superintendent, will open the series. The Michigan State Police will describe the work of the police both in criminal detection and in civil protection. The State Department of Agriculture and the State Highway Department will continue their broadcasts.

For most interested in education, the Michigan State College of the Air provides 18 courses by radio. Three broadcasts each week direct from the classroom will be made of the course Survey of English Literature. Spanish lessons will continue with Prof. J. O. Seo conducting the course. New courses include Rural Sociology, Farm Electrification, Planning and Remodeling Farm Buildings, and Child Development. Information and enrollment books are now being sent to those who wish to pursue these courses.

Many other new features are added to the programs, both in education and as entertainment. The high schools of the state are being invited to participate with bands, orchestras, and glee clubs. A series on vocational guidance will begin on January 13, with President R. S. Shaw of Michigan State College as the first speaker. An early morning program is to be given daily at 6 a. m. HARD SURFACE 1,200 MILES TRUNK LINES

Program of Last Three Years Increased Dust-Proof Highways

The State Highway Department has hard surfaced nearly 1,200 miles of trunkline highways in Michigan the last three years.

A compilation by State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner as of December 31 shows there are 4,727.97 miles of hard-surfaced highways in Michigan today compared with 3,590.46 miles at the same time in 1932.

The 1,137 three years have seen an increase of 762.9 miles in the concrete mileage on trunkline highways. In December, 1932, the total concrete mileage was 2,936.17 miles compared with the present mileage of 3,699.13.

The increase in hard surfaced roads has been comparable with the trunkline "abolition" in the last three years. In 1932 the total maintained mileage was 8,312.54 miles compared with 9,458.21 at the present time.

Although many mile of gravel highways have been hard surfaced in the last three years, the mileage of gravel roads has not been reduced proportionately. There are now 3,397 miles of gravel trunkline compared with 3,545 miles in 1932. Continued additions to the trunkline system explain why the gravel mileage has been reduced only 238 miles in three years.

Carl Knudson, who had the misfortune to shoot himself while out hunting several weeks ago, has returned from Ann Arbor very much improved.

The community extends its sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Earle Clarke, of East Jordan, in the death of their daughter, Ruth. The Clarke family were tenants on Breezy Point Farm about 15 years ago.

Paul Hanson entertained about 15 of his friends from Boyne City and Ironton with a skating party Monday, after which Mrs. Hanson served lovely refreshments. Every one had a very enjoyable time.

Mrs. Sam Alexander entertained about 25 of her friends with a Christmas party last week Friday. A fine program was enjoyed and the usual exchanging of gift, after which Mrs. Alexander served delicious refreshments.

The Ladies' Aid Society will have an all day meeting and potluck dinner at noon Thursday of the week at the home of Mrs. Lewis Brown. The men are invited to meet with them. The annual church meeting and election of officers will be held at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Barnum, of Lake City, and son, Robert, also Erma Bell, who is a student at Michigan State College, in East Lansing, and Mr. and Mrs. Russ Alexander, Sam and Jane Ann were Christmas guests of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Alexander.

"I'm to stay in the Emergency hospital overnight and then come in and write a big story."

"Greeny thinks they don't treat people right there?"

"That's the idea, I believe."

"Well but then—" Lawrence's slow smile showed in his brown face. "Then whatever was wrong, you'd get," he said.

"Exactly!"

"Why, I don't think he has any right to ask you to do a thing like that," the man decided slowly. "I think I'd decline."

"The thing is, Larry— This is very pleasant, having a fire here, and getting warm, and talking it over" Tony broke off to say.

"Pleasant is right!"

"No, but the thing is," she resumed, "that I hope some day to do signed stuff, and get into real special article work, and he says this is my chance."

"You'll have plenty of chances," Lawrence said, rubbing his long hands together, looking into the fire, "you don't have to worry about that. I wouldn't go in for that sensational stuff; in the first place it isn't good journalism. That's the worst of that crowd down there Fitch and Allen—all of them It's outlawed, that stuff."

"Still a job's a job, Larry."

"Yes, but you're a good deal surer of a job than you were six months ago. No, I'd tell Greeny to roll his hoop—"

Tony's eyes were dark with a sort of dancing light.

"I'm not going to do it," she said. "And thanks for putting me straight. I knew you'd know just about what it all meant."

"Whatever you do, you'll go straight ahead, Tony. Get your stuff, and write it the best you can and turn it in, and that's all they want. You're perfectly safe."

"I didn't know that anyone could be so happy about work."

"I don't believe you can do it decently until you are happy about it."

"We sound as if we were making talk," she thought, in the idle silence that followed. "It's the first time we've been alone together for months, now that I come to think of it. But certainly I'm not shy with me"

Tony, looking into the fire with smiling eyes, mused idly, "Larry, is there any chance in your ever expanding the Journal, putting regular woman's stuff in?" she added idly. "Remember I talked to you about it that first day?"

"Not that—" he answered readily, and paused.

"But what?"

"Well, there's a chance I may go over to the Examiner, with the Journal in my pocket."

"No-o-o!" Tony exclaimed, for if all newspaper gossip was thrilling, this was sensationally so.

"Nothing settled. But they've wanted to have a business page for some time, with a four-page Saturday supplement every week. What is the Journal today would practically be that supplement. I'd have Currier's job—she's getting out anyway, he's all tied up with real estate in Thousand Oaks, and he's pretty old. I'd handle the stock and bond stuff, and the market generally, and get up this supplement once a week. Frazer would keep the name Journal on it, with the other name."

Tony's blue eyes were watching him sympathetically.

"Is that—would that be a disappointment to you, Larry?"

"A disappointment? No! Why, that's what I've been trying to build up these three years. It's the theory of the 'nuisance value.' My circulation was taken right out of theirs; they knew it. And I get no price for the paper," Larry said.

She continued to regard him admiringly. He was looking into the fire, his long legs stretched toward it, his big shoulders slumped into his deep chair. Tony studied the familiar lines of the aquiline nose, the sharp little nick his eyeglasses gave to his profile, the thick heavy waves of dark hair. The friendship of such a man was a pleasantly stirring sort of thing.

Larry glanced about, and they smiled at each other. When she looked back at the fire again, still without speaking, Tony was conscious that the color was coming up into her face, and that her heart was beating rather hard. It was a silly feeling, it made her indignant with herself, but there.

Before either spoke again Ruth came in, very completely equipped in checked raincoat, checked cap, checked umbrella. She gave these things to a maid in the doorway and came, smiling and blown and chilly, to the fire.

Ruth's hair, beginning to turn gray, had been crushed by the cap and the rain to a dishevelled mass. Her intelligent face, that never had been pretty, looked rather pasty and lined as she smiled at Tony and her husband, her light gray eyes flashed behind strong glasses. She stretched her thin slender toe to the blaze. Tony had scrambled down to a leather hassock at the fire beside her. She was warm now, excited by her talk with Larry, happy. She loved this room in the rainy afternoon, with its books and its pictures and its firelight, and she loved these persons.

Her cheeks had lost the high color that had been whipped into them by wind and rain, but the clear pallor of her face only made her eyes look more alive. Her skin was as clean as ivory, and above the low forehead her hair had been curled by the wet day into a very cloud of shiny tufts and curls. She had curled her body up, child fashion, and was hugging her knees; the beautiful slim first line of breast and hips, the slender ankles, the glowing silken beauty of her were enhanced by the contrast that was so close.

"Well, There's a Chance I May Go Over to the Examiner."

"What have you been talking about?" Ruth asked.

"Oh, did you tell her?" Ruth's eyebrows went up as she glanced at Larry.

"We were talking shop."

Tony, sitting between them on the low leather hassock, with her arms hugging her knees and her eyes on the fire, fell into musing. She heard their voices murmuring; she paid no attention to what they said. It was felicity to be here, safe from rain and cold. Life would seem odd, now, without Larry and Ruth.

"Why can't you stay and dine with us, Tony?" Ruth said.

"I can't. I've got a woman to interview across the street. And I've got to go back to the office."

"Tony, will you call me in the morning about the show on Friday night?"

"I will, the first thing." Larry walked with her through the handsome room, and Tony saw, as she had seen so many times, the big photograph of Larry, and the big photograph of Mrs. Patterson, and the bowl of violets, and the heavy smooth block of white elephant lamp. Everything Ruth had was heavy and expensive, and many of the jars and pictures and chairs and rugs were beautiful; the effect of them all, with firelight and lamplight brightening them, and rain falling gently beyond the curtained high windows, was one of comfort and charm.

Today there seemed to be some quality deeper than mere comfort or charm about it; Tony felt vaguely elated and excited as she said her careless "Good night" and went her careless way. Her heart was singing as she entered the big hotel opposite the apartment house, secured her interview, and went downtown to the hot lousy newspaper office feeling herself adequate, successful, alive. "After all," thought Tony, hammering out her story at the disgraceful old typewriter whose "k" and "l" sometimes got into a deathlock, and whose spacing bar often fell down limply, and had to be braced with twine, "after all, that's all a girl wants; to feel alive. With people liking her, and work that she likes to do—and Bondy to go home to!"

For every night had to end with a talk with Brenda, while they were cold-creamed their faces and wandering about from room to room. Tony, typewriting away busily in the newspaper office, in the warm black rainy night, thought of a dozen things she must say to her sister; Brenda would be relieved to hear that Larry had definitely advised against the fainting-in-the-street assignment.—And the Fairmont interview, and the various small events of the day should all be related.

But there was one experience of which Tony wouldn't tell her. For one thing it wasn't important, and for another, it would be impossible to tell.

It was merely that when he had come with her into the hall, and had held her coat for her, Larry had said—or no, he hadn't said much, hadn't said anything—really—

He had nodded to Chevalier in dismissal, and that he itself had somehow made her heart beat hard; the expression on Larry's face had been so—so authoritative—so manlike—

And then he had said—well, he had only said, "Goodbye, Tony. And thanks, always thanks, for what you do for us all."

But his look, as he said it—ah, that was the thing one couldn't tell Brenda, nor how it made one feel, nor how one remembered it.

Tony, in the bright, noisy, hot newspaper office, found her work constantly interrupted by the need there was to stop short and remember it.

CHAPTER X

Night had come black and wet over the city, and the windows of the newspaper office ran sparkles of rain. Tony wriggled happily at her desk; it was great fun to be a part of this exciting hot bright atmosphere tonight, to have the men lumbering about, smoking and talking, and the typewriters clicking, and to smell the good smell of pulp paper and ink, rubber and tobacco smoke, and the sweet-scented soap at the washstands. Her telephone tinkled; the obliging Linda Flood had an engagement to lunch.

"Listen, girl, it's a profound secret, of course, but I got it by accident, and I'm not bound to keep it."

"Patricia Porter?" Tony breathed. If she could scoop the engagement of Patricia Porter she would be safe in Greeny's good graces for weeks. She had gotten a good interview that afternoon; she was holding her own amazingly. But the Patricia Porter scoop would be the triumph of a season!

"To Lee Carolan Scott, of course."

"Of course. I'll tell you how I know. The rich confidential voice of the old society reporter broke into laughter at the other end of the telephone. "His brother's wife was buying an engagement cup in the White House while I was waiting for Louisette there this afternoon, and she sent it to Patsy. But mind you keep me out of it."

"Oh, that clinches it, then! And I'm so much obliged to you. I'll follow it right up!"

Tony clicked her telephone back into place and referred to her notebook of social data.

"Mrs. Olney Parks. That's the Porter girl's aunt. West zero-seven-seven-seven." Tony mused dialing busily. She recognized the dowager's rich voice a moment later. "This is Elinor Blah-blah, Mrs. Parks," she said brightly. "Is Patsy there? I can't wait to hear all about it!"

"No; she's dining with Lee's family tonight. But—we're all so delighted!" the voice said complacently. And then suddenly: "Why, is this talking?"

Tony silently broke the connection; presently she was telephoning the house of Scott. Was Miss Porter there?

"Patsy darling, I'm thrilled!" she exclaimed, when the happy accents of the bride-to-be came over the wire. "When's it to be?"

"Who is it? Who told you?" Patsy demanded, not quite pleased.

"Mary," Tony answered at random. There was always a Mary. "And, my dear, everyone'll be perfectly wild with excitement!"

"He says June, and I say August," Patsy was lured into saying. "But who'd you say told you? We've not told anyone. And who is, this?"

Again Tony made a silent exit from the conversation; half an hour later she called the Scott house again; it was a "person-to-person" call for Mr. Lee Scott.

"Mr. Scott," she said without preamble, "I have a telegram here for you. 'Affectionate congratulations to you and Patricia,' and it's signed, 'Uncle Bill.' Would you like me to mail you a copy?"

"Is that right? Read it again," said the startled voice of Mr. Scott. "Uncle—what?"

"Uncle Bill. Would you like me to trace it?"

"Oh, no, no. It's all right, thanks, Patsy!" Tony could hear the man call bewilderedly, "what do you know about some Uncle Bill's getting onto us? Who is Uncle Bill? I have no Uncle Bill!"

Tony could sit back complacently; she had secured the Scott Porter engagement.

WINTER WHEAT ACREAGE IN AVERAGE CONDITION

Crop Report Service Says Planting Is 84 Per Cent Normal

Although much of the Michigan winter wheat acreage was sown rather late this past fall, the crop in most parts of the state is going into the winter under close to average conditions.

According to a report just released by the Michigan Cooperative Crop Reporting Service, the condition of the Michigan winter wheat acreage on December 1, 1935, was 84 per cent of normal which is five points less than for December 1 last year but only two points below the 10-year average figure for that date. The dry sub-soil delayed summer and fall plowing in some parts of the state, and the seeding of the crop was also held up to some extent by the late harvest of field beans and corn.

The Michigan acreage of winter wheat, sown for harvest in 1936, has been estimated by the Crop Reporting Service at 2,750,000 acres which is five per cent less than the acreage sown in the fall of 1934 although 11 per cent more than the five-year average ending for the 1928-32 crop.

TRACKS DON'T PROVE THE SEX OF A DEER

Conservation Officials Say This Belief of Hunters Is Erroneous

Except possibly in size, no two make similar tracks. Yet between 400 and 500 hunter interviewed by Merril Jackson, Conservation officer of Ogemaw county, all believed that they could distinguish between the tracks of a buck deer and the track of a doe.

On the theory that many does have been shot by hunters who had followed deer tracks with the mistaken belief that they were left by a buck, Jackson visited the camps of deer hunters before and during the hunting season, carrying a number of deer feet.

YOU'LL GET MAXIMUM SERVICE ... FROM YOUR TIRES ...

If You Have Firestones On Your Car

The season of the year is now here when your tires will be expected to give you the best in service. This you cannot expect if you have old and worn out or inferior tires on your car. But you can expect and will get maximum service from your tires if you have Firestones. Into the construction of every Firestone tire that is moulded out goes the finest quality material that can be obtained and the process of construction is by the most scientific methods. The result is—a tire that can be depended on to give you even more service than most motorists expect.

At this time of year it is especially important that you should be equipped with the best of tires. Pause for a moment and consider what a terrific smash-up may result if one of your tires "blew out" on a glary highway when you were doing 50 or 60 miles an hour.

Think of the discomfort that may be the result if a tire suddenly went "flat" when you happened to be miles from the nearest town and the thermometer hovering around zero. Consider the delay in travelling time if you were forced to interrupt your trip, whether for business or pleasure, if you were halted out on the highway by a flat tire.

Then think, too, of the expense of keeping up old tires. Every wise motorist agrees that it is much more economical to drive on new tires than to keep repairing old tires.

You can avoid any or all of these hardships by installing new tires now. Before you venture out again on dangerous tires, think seriously of the above reasons why you should have new tires, and why you should have new Firestones.

The Firestone tire dealer listed here is prepared to serve you and respectfully solicits an opportunity to be of service to you.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

Machinery School for Charlevoix County Farmers

Michigan winter sunshine can not be used to cure hay, but it is the best kind of weather for curing some of the troubles which are sure to take place during the next harvest season if the haying equipment is not repaired and adjusted before the rush of farm work starts.

This will be the third demonstration that has been arranged for farmers in this county, at which a specialist in agricultural engineering from Michigan State College will show farmers how to repair and adjust a mowing machine so that it will be in first class shape for next summer's hay crop. In addition considerable time will be spent on the grain binder as well as other farm machinery. This demonstration will be held in the old Lewis Grange, in Boyne City, on Wednesday, January 8, beginning at 10 o'clock. If you have difficulty in locating this building, stop in at the Boyne City co-op or the county agent's office for directions; but it is south of the railroad track, directly back of the Northern Auto Company. The mowing machine will be torn down in the forenoon and assembled during the afternoon. It is suggested that if you can not be present all day, come at 1:30 in the afternoon at which time a discussion of tools and equipment needed for repairs, of construction adjustment and repairs, actual replacement of parts and adjustment of the machine for repairing will take place.

Last year the agricultural engineering department of the college held something like 40 of these machinery repair demonstrations and worked on mowing machines whose average age was 20 years. The cost of getting these machines in the good serviceable condition was approximately $5 each.

Michigan farmers have about $10,000,000 invested in mowing machines and the average life of this equipment is 12 years. Whatever adjustment repairs made, which lengthen the life of the mower, are a big saving to the owners.

Very few Charlevoix county farmers have enough acres of hay to cut year after year so that a machine is actually worn out. Neglect in making minor adjustments or repairs usually reduces the efficiency of the machine until the owner becomes disgusted and buys a new machine rather than work on the old one.

An old mower owned by a Charlevoix county farmer will be brought to the meeting and all the needed repairs and adjustments will be made and the reasons for making them will be discussed. Those who attend the demonstration should be able to go over their own machines afterward and decide what new parts and what adjustments will be needed on their own machines.

Most of the mowers will need only small repairs such as section bars, guards or ledger plates, and adjustments to take up wear in gears and bearings. Cutter bars out of line increase the draft of the machine and decrease its efficiency in cutting. Failure to register the knives exactly may cause the machine to cut unevenly, choke up and clog, and to leave uncut hay. All of these troubles can be cured by a few minutes' efforts.

These adjustments will be shown at the Boyne City meeting. Every one interested in farm machinery is invited to attend this meeting.

Wild deer apparently are unafraid of traps. After having been taken in a live-trap an individual buck or doe may return 10 or 12 times to the same trap to be captured and released again.

Nearly a million dollars will go into the improvement and development of Michigan's state parks during the ensuing year if the Works Progress Administration approves plans of state parks authorities.

A project outline that would require an expenditure of more than $900,000 in labor and materials has been submitted to the WPA officials by the Parks Division, Department of Conservation.

Two new areas have been selected by state game authorities this year for deer live-trapping operations. One of these areas is the Luther-Baldwin state forest; the other the Escanaba River tract.

Live traps also will be placed in the Casino refuge unit on Lake Superior; Wilderness State Park on the Straits of Mackinac, and for the first time since 1930 in the Crawford refuge, Crawford county.

A total of 23 live-traps will be placed in the units mentioned, five each in all but Wilderness State Park, where three will be used.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

Sunday dinner pales before the importance of Christmas dinner. All the markets are dressed with food displays for this most important dinner of the year. Poultry is on display, turkeys perhaps most popular in this country, geese for those who go in for tradition, ducklings and chicken for small families and small incomes.

The standard vegetables are all inexpensive, in addition both green peas and lima beans are moderately priced.

Grapefruit, oranges, tangerines and apples are all abundant and low in price. Nut crops were unusually large this year — that walnuts, pecans, filberts and peanuts are all cheaper than usual.

IF YOUR BREATH HAS A SMELL YOU CAN'T FEEL WELL

When we eat too much, our food decays in our bowels. Our friends smell this decay coming out of our mouth and call it bad breath. We feel the poison of this decay all over our body. It makes us gloomy, grouchy and no good for anything.

What makes the food decay in the bowels? Well, when we eat too much, our bile juice can't digest it. What is the bile juice? It is the most vital digestive juice in our body. Unless 2 pints of it are flowing from our liver into our bowels every day, our movements get hard and constipated and ¾ of our food decays in our 28 feet of bowels. This decay sends poison all over our body every six minutes.

When our friends smell our bad breath (but we don't) and we feel like a whipped lizzat, don't use a mouthwash or take a laxative. Get at the cause. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills which gently start the flow of your bile juice. But if "something better" is offered you, don't buy it, for it may be a calomel (mercury) pill, which loosens teeth, gripes and scalds the rectum in many people. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name and get what you ask for—25¢. ©1934, C.M.Co.

SHORELINE HIGHWAY PROGRAM UNDER WAY

Highway Dep't Reports $6,500,000 In Projects Approved

Approval by the Works Progress Administration of $6,500,000 worth of tourist and shoreline relocation projects was announced today by Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner.

The commissioner emphasized, however, that only a fourth of this program may ever be completed. He pointed out that the projects were originally submitted to start last fall and to be completed next July. Before any approval of the program, be continued, may entail the project unless extensions are granted next March, the new deadline on WPA road projects.

Of 26 project approved by the WPA, Commissioner Van Wagoner said that work has already started or will start within the next few days on ten for a total expenditure of $1,874,818.

Another factor which may seriously interfere with the program is the scarcity of relief or unemployed labor. So rapidly have the unemployed been given jobs in private industry or on relief projects that Commissioner Van Wagoner has been given no assurance that labor will be available for the proposed projects. Federal regulations require that relief labor only be used on these projects.

This scarcity of labor threatened for a time to hold up the State Highway Department's $20,000,000 relief program but Louis Nims, director of the projects division of the WPA, issued orders of priority for these highway projects in the assignment of relief or unemployed labor.

The State Highway Department's participation in this program is similar to the procedure under the program launched several weeks ago for surfacing graved trunklines with oil aggregate. The department will furnish the engineering and technical supervision with all other details including the financing of the projects handled by the Works Progress Administration under the direction of Nims.

Included among the projects approved for early construction are ten mile on US-23 from Harrisville south and a number on the Upper Peninsula.

This contest is being conducted by the Federated Garden Clubs of Michigan in cooperation with the Department of Conservation and is open to all high school pupils. There are no special entrance requirements. Information concerning the contest can be obtained through local garden clubs or directly from the Department of Conservation at Lansing.

The two boys and two girls who submit the most significant and novel poster-slogans in competition with all other high school pupils entered will win the free trips to Isle Royale. These trips will be conducted during the summer. Guides and chaperones will accompany the winners.

DUNPHY REPLIES TO INQUIRY BY A. OF C.

Reveals Light Passenger Traffic Results In Daily P. M. Loss

Recent effort on the part of the local Association of Commerce to prevail on officials of the Pere Marquette Railway Company to give up their recently expressed determination to substitute a mixed freight and passenger run for the present north and south bound passenger service has elicited the following letter from John Dunphy, general passenger agent of the road:

"Your letter of the 19th. I dislike, and so do all of our people, to resort to the contemplated mixed train service north of Traverse City; but frankly, the record of the passengers handled on the train during the winter months is so frightfully thin, showing a very definite loss from operation every day it is run, that we rather feel impelled to take some account of the conditions as we find them.

"You will be surprised, perhaps, when I tell you that quite frequently during the winter months, the train runs north of Traverse City without a single passenger in either direction, and never more than a mere handful; in fact, generally less than can be counted on the fingers of one hand. In addition to that train, we are of course to the necessity of providing some service to take care of the local freight needs and requirement, and it is our thought that considering there are so very, very few who make use of the passenger service, that we can combine the two and really not be hurting anybody, because if there isn't anybody to ride, there isn't anybody to hurt, by discontinuing the straight passenger service and substituting another form of service. Just when the change will be made I am not now able to say. It is contemplated to at least continue the present operation until after the holiday season."

LAKE SURVEY PLANNED IN NORTHERN REGION

CCC Cooperating With U. of M. Institute of Fisheries Research

Cooperating with the Institute for Fisheries Research of the University of Michigan, the Michigan Emergency Conservation Work organization is shortly to start on a comprehensive lake sounding survey with CCC camp crews assisting MECW technical personnel.

The survey will determine lake position, topography for an area one-half mile around each lake surveyed, and the lake depth at regular intervals. R. W. Eschmeyer, of the Institute, has chosen the lakes to be surveyed. Harvey Eustrom, MECW civil engineer, will supervise the work. The survey is being made as a preliminary to a lake bottom study by the Institute. Crews of 10 CCC enrollees will be detailed from various camps to complete the survey, which is estimated to take two and one-half months.

Survey maps are to show the following information: Lake inlets and outlets, roads, cottages, type of beach, boat landings, trails, outstanding landmarks, parks, resorts, limits of towns and villages bordering on lakes, and depths at intervals of 50 feet from the shore out to 300 feet, and at 200 feet intervals thereafter. Soundings will be made through holes spudded in the ice.

MICHIGAN FARMERS INCREASE CROP OF HOGS

Producers Take Advantage of Federal Plan Stepping Up Production

Michigan hog producers increased their 1935 fall pig crop markedly over that for the last half of 1934 and are planning a further expansion in their 1936 spring farrowings, according to the December 1 pig survey report released today by Verne H. Church, U. S. agricultural statistician, and James F. Thomson, commissioner of agriculture.

This report is based upon returns from approximately 4,000 Michigan farms collected through the rural mail carriers of the Post Office Department. In commenting upon the prospective increase in 1936 spring farrowings, Mr. Church pointed out that under the 1936 Corn-Hog Adjustment Program, contract signers are allowed to produce, without penalty, as many hogs as their yearly average of 1932-1933.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear wife and mother, Mrs. Lau Durance, who passed away seven years ago, December 29, 1928.

"In our old home town of Charlevoix,
Lies a loved one you all know;
She was our mother and your dear friend,
But that was seven years ago.

So much has happened since that day
God took her away from our fold.
But we cherish the memory of mother
And her love; which will never grow old."

FRANCES MARSHALL IS WINTER QUEEN

SELECTED IN CONTEST AT GYM TUESDAY NIGHT

Marie Novak and Ernestine Chew Maids of Honor—Coronation and Queen's Ball Friday Evening

Selected by popular vote from a group of 14 candidates in a contest conducted Tuesday evening at the gymnasium, Miss Frances Marshall was named Charlevoix winter queen and this city's candidate for Michigan winter queen at Petoskey.

Miss Marie Novak and Miss Ernestine Chew, the runners-up, will be maids of honor.

An attendance estimated at 800 persons was present at the contest. The candidates were presented in two cleverly arranged scenes. The first, with the girls in formals, depicted a casting director (Harry E. Bingham) interviewing applicants. In the course of the interview, each was given an opportunity to speak, one presented a piano number, a group of six danced, another group of three sang with instrumental accompaniment. In the second presentation the group appeared in winter costume in a scene which included Harold Crow and Leslie Shapton in the cast. Ruth Ann Dowd and Miss Freda McMillan directed the tableaus and arranged the most effective scenery.

Balloting followed, the first vote eliminating the field to the three receiving the highest vote. On the second ballot Miss Marshall received the majority, and Miss Novak and Miss Chew second and third.

The program was interspersed with interesting educational talkies.

Miss Marshall, 24, and a brunette, is a fancy skater of proficiency. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Marshall, Antrim street.

Queen Frances will receive her crown from Arthur L. Fitch, prominent local attorney, in an elaborate outdoor ceremony at the municipal skating rink at 8 o'clock Friday evening. The ceremony will take place from an ice throne erected on the east side of the rink. Music will be furnished by the city band, and another feature immediately following the coronation will be the appearance of a group of 15 Petoskey fancy skaters in a program of fancy and novelty skating.

Another high light of the evening's program will be the Winter Queen's Ball at the high school gymnasium, following the outdoor program. Dancing will start at 9:30 o'clock and large delegations from Petoskey, Boyne City, East Jordan and other Northern Michigan points will be present.

Queen Frances and her attendants will be formally presented, and the queen, following her introduction, will lead the grand march.

Music for the party will be furnished by Wexstaff's eight-piece orchestra. Elaborate decorations are planned and appropriate favors will be presented. Admission to the dance floor will be 50 cents per couple, and balcony admission 10 cents per person, proceeds to go to the winter sports fund.

The committee members in charge of this affair are Charles H. Emrey, Harold Hallett, George Haggard, H. I. Ochs, Carl Erber and Arthur Wexstaff. The ball will be the high spot in entertainment during the winter season.

All are invited to attend this community affair.

DEVELOP FINE RECREATION PROGRAM IRONTON

Have Hockey Rink, Coasting, Facilities for Indoor Sports Activities

Taking advantage of the opportunity afforded by the WPA recreational program in Charlevoix county, the rural community of Ironton has developed excellent facilities for outdoor and indoor sports.

A hockey rink 60 x 130 feet, the only one in Charlevoix county, has been built. It has a four-foot removable fence, is lighted with electric flood lights for night play and flooded by electrically-driven pump. Other outdoor facilities include a coasting hill, iced and supervised.

In the Ironton school a room has been furnished with equipment for basketball, volley ball, shuffle board and table tennis. In addition Louis Bourissau of this city is directing a group of 35 young people in the organization of a community band and orchestra which is meeting with enthusiasm and fine cooperation.

Dean Davenport, county WPA recreational director, organized the Ironton program, sponsored by Ironton school officials. Noel Thomson and Everett Spidle are the supervisors in charge.

POST OFFICE BUSINESS ON INCREASE

GROSS RECEIPTS FOR 1935 ARE GREATER THAN IN 1934

Money Order Business Dropped by Over Thirty-two Thousand During Past Year, Report Shows

Charlevoix's post office, which is this, as well as any other city's best barometer of business pulse, showed a decided gain in gross business during 1935 over the previous year, which in turn was better than 1933.

This increase, in keeping with the general upturn in business, is shown in data made available by Postmaster Clarence B. Meggison, who reports gross receipts of $18,425.17 during 1935, as compared with $17,254.11 in 1934, a gain of $1,171.06. Gross receipts during 1933 were $15,217.38.

Gross receipts as taken in a post office are only the sales of stamps, postal cards, envelopes, paper wrappers and box rents. In the money order department, which is separate from the postal business, a decrease of volume was noted. A total of 20,540 orders were written, aggregating $169,397.35, for which service $1,898.96 was collected in fees. These figures compare with 20,750 orders aggregating $202,386.88 and fees of $1,968.31 during the year of 1934, a decrease of $32,989.53.

It will be of interest to the public to know that the city delivery is handled by three postmen who cover about 40 miles per day, making 1,100 stops. The three rural carriers operating from the Charlevoix post office cover 113 miles each day and make 150 stops. The city delivery service is augmented by additional men during the busy summer months.

It is interesting to note that an approximate average of 5,000 pieces of mail of all classes is distributed daily through the local post office.

COMMERCIAL FISHING BIG INDUSTRY

WHITEFISH AND TROUT LEAD IN VALUE

Statistics for 1935 Show Michigan Waters Produced Catches Valued at Over Two Million

Michigan's commercial fisheries continue to be a two-million dollar industry.

The annual statistical report of the state fisheries authorities for the year of 1934, recently compiled, places the total value of all commercial species caught in the Great Lakes waters under Michigan's jurisdiction during that year at $2,767,685.84.

This is a marked increase over the previous year of 1933, brought about principally by a rise in market prices. The total catch of 1934 was more than 2,000,000 pounds greater than that of the previous year, however, the report shows.

Whitefish and lake trout continued at the top in economic importance, representing approximately 70 per cent of the value of all commercial fish taken in Michigan waters. The pike perch or wall-eyed pike and the Great Lakes herring rank third and fourth down the line, respectively.

	Pounds	Value

EMMET COUNTY ADDED TO WPA OFFICE HERE

Change Eliminates Office at Petoskey—Changes In Personnel

In a move aimed to decrease administrative expense in WPA district No. 1, the office at Petoskey, handling projects for Emmet and Cheboygan counties, has been closed by order of Richard Lawson, director.

Emmet county has been placed under D. T. McHugh, director of Charlevoix, Antrim and Otsego counties, with office in Charlevoix, while Cheboygan county projects will be handled through the district office at Cheboygan.

In conjunction with the change in districts, several changes in personnel have also been made. Raymond Herron, formerly chief clerk in the Charlevoix office, becomes area supervisor of timekeepers for Charlevoix and Antrim counties, combining new duties with those of chief clerk. A. W. Gibson assumes a similar position for Emmet and Otsego counties.

Supervisors of tools, equipment and material have been named for the four counties under the Charlevoix office as follows: Leslie Shook for Charlevoix, Wayne Mills for Antrim, J. C. Harbaugh for Emmet, and Casimir Makowiak for Otsego.

Miss Angie Scott, connected with the local office since opening, has been transferred to the finance department at Cheboygan. Mrs. Katherine Mayne is retained here.

ANNOUNCE THIRD BIRTHDAY PARTY

ROOSEVELT BALL TO BE HELD JAN. 30 AT ARGONNE

Seventy Per Cent of Funds Raised Remain in Community; Rest for National Infantile Sufferers

The third annual Roosevelt Birthday Party, receipts of which will be sent to help support the Warm Springs charity hobby of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, will be held at The Argonne on Thursday, January 30th, it has been announced.

Charlevoix, together with communities all over the nation, honored the President and contributed to his Warm Springs fund on his birthday the past two years. As a result more than a million dollars went to assist children crippled by infantile paralysis in securing treatment at Warm Springs.

Dan McCann and "Bill" Supernaw have been named general chairmen of this year's birthday party for the President, and they are now organizing the committees which will assist in making the ball a grand success.

President Roosevelt has decreed that the Warm Springs fund will be distributed differently this year and that 70 cents of every dollar shall remain in the community in which it is raised to be used for the rehabilitation of crippled or handicapped children. The remaining 30 cents will be turned over to President Roosevelt and will be used to finance a national commission investigating ways and means of eradicating infantile paralysis.

On the night of the Birthday Ball, President Roosevelt will go on the air at 11:30 to send a message of thanks to every community over a combination of all the radio broadcasting networks.

Similar Clinic at Bay Shore School Set for Afternoon Same Day

On Thursday morning, January 16, Dr. Carleton Dean, of the District Health Unit, will conduct physical examinations of all school children at Burgess school. All parents having children attending school are urged to be present.

At the same time, opportunity will be given for immunizing the school children, infants and pre-school children against smallpox and diphtheria. It is hoped all parents of the community will be sufficiently interested in their children's health to cooperate with the plan.

Also, the same type of clinic will be conducted Thursday afternoon, January 16, at 1:30 o'clock, at the Bay Shore school.

Politics Barred on WKAR Air Talks

When officials of the state of Michigan begin the series of broadcasts over WKAR, the radio broadcasting station of Michigan State College at East Lansing, they will discuss, for the information of listeners, problems of state government of interest to individuals who support the government. There will be no party lines; department heads of both major political parties will be invited to speak. The state's only non-commercial radio station, in competing for attention, will offer programs unique because of the absence of appeal to anything but listener interest.

On Friday, January 10, Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald will speak at 1:15 in the afternoon; Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, will precede him at 2:45 p. m. Each will speak for 15 minutes. The later period will be designated "governor's hour" each Friday; on the first four Fridays, an official from the Department of State will speak at the earlier period. Others who will be invited to speak, during this series of broadcasts, include David H. Crowley, attorney general; Theodore I. Fry state treasurer; Dr. Eugene B. Elliott, state superintendent of public instruction; John J. O'Hara, auditor general; Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner, and others.

So far as listeners are concerned, WKAR became, on January 6, virtually a new station. Its transmitting frequency was changed from 1040 to 850 kilocycles; its power of 1,000 watts will give anyone in Michigan virtually "clear channel" reception, as a result. Only one broadcasting station in the state has more power; only three have as much. The state's own station is on the air 30 hours a week. The addresses by state officials will be in line with the "college of the air" theme which will emphasize culture and entertainment.

NEW EGG GRADING LAW STARTED JANUARY 1ST

Lenient Enforcement Planned Until Dealers Become More Familiar

Lenient enforcement of egg grading regulations which went into effect January 1 will prevail for six months to give producers, dealers and consumers an opportunity to become familiar with the provisions, according to Agriculture Commissioner James F. Thomson.

The Michigan rules provide for four grades of eggs—fancy, A, B and C. Grading will be strictly according to quality without regard to size, Thomson said.

Grading rules will be strictly enforced, however, on eggs shipped in from outside of Michigan.

Tony thrust her typewriting found Bess Cutler beside her. Bess looked rather frowzy and florid by night; she had been dining, and the scent of food and drink was on her breath.

"Where's Fitch?" she asked Tony abruptly. "I had a couple of friends for dinner, and he didn't show up."

"Fitch?" Tony said, with widened eyes. "He was here about ten minutes ago, but he may have gone home."

"Was Milly Richards here?"

Tony smiled. She was not afraid of the ash-blonde Milly; she rather despised her. Milly was a fluttering, breathless little creature of about Tony's age, who seemed younger because of her fair skin and pale-gold hair, and who had been following the "Sunshine Gospel" revivalist movement about. The Sunshine tent, with its preachers and singers, its organ music and hymn books and benches, had settled down for a stay on the outskirts of the city, and Milly was its most enthusiastic preacher and exhorting little press agent. Tony had regaled the home dinner table for several nights with accounts of Milly. Tony had had to rewrite all of Milly's stories.

Now she regarded Bess with a growing change in her expression and interest.

"Hm—good heavens, Bess," she murmured, "she surely isn't interested in Mr. Fitch?"

"She had dinner with them Sunday over in Piedmont. She's got him praying. Him—after all he's done!" Bess muttered bitterly, her rouged lips trembling. "Why, he's a skunk, Fitch is; I never would have looked at him if he hadn't said he was going to get a divorce all that."

"Well, I wish the whole crowd of them was in the bay! Why couldn't they leave him alone? Frank Fitch isn't their kind; don't you think for one minute I'm the only woman he ever looked at! And don't think that there aren't other papers ready to jump at my feature if he's crazy enough to let it go!"

"He didn't say anything about stopping the column!"

"Didn't he?" Bess fumbled in her evening bag; the evidence was there. A letter from the president's office to say that the Call was retrenching and must make some changes on the editorial page; another letter that said, "Sorry, but I did my best and both Davidson and Arnoldson turned me down."

This letter was signed merely with a penciled "F."; Tony had seen many of Mr. Fitch's notes to the staff signed that way. She looked questioningly, expectantly at Bess.

"You don't think I'm going to stand for it?" Bess demanded.

"It's a shame," Tony said, with a warmth she did not feel. She knew that Bess had not contributed one single valuable line or idea to the newspaper in all the months of her own work there.

"He can't get away with it."

"Did he say anything about it the last time you saw him?"

"I haven't seen him since Saturday."

"And this is Thursday." Tony said slowly, sparring for time. "She's probably persuading him to go back to his wife."

"Well." The younger woman's face flushed unromantically, in spite of all that she could do. "It seems funny," she said feebly.

"Frank's always had a tremendous opinion of himself," Bess said, from smouldering thought; "now this 'Sunshine Gospel' thing fits right in, and he's going to be a whitewashed angel. Lucky for him he didn't get converted three years ago, when he and I first were friends—There he is!"

Tony looking across the swinging lights and littered desks, saw Mr. Fitch slipping quietly through to his own office door. Bess was immediately after him; the various men grinned significantly as she went incoherently by, with her fine feathers somewhat draggled by the rain, and her rouged cheeks redder than even her own bold artifice had made them. She was breathing hard and angrily; she saw Mr. Fitch look up at her.

When Tony went up to Mr. Green's desk a few minutes later he gave her an anguish and significant smile.

"Fireworks in the old man's office, eh?"

"He Can't Get Away With It."

"Sounds like it."

"What'd she say?"

"Oh-h-h, everything. They're going to cut the feature."

"I heard that. Well, Bess'll take care of herself."

"She's paying two hundred for that apartment."

"Who said so?"

"She did."

"We're paying her a hundred a week," the city editor said musingly. "Well, if he says she's to get out, she'll get out."

"Could he keep her if he wanted to, Greeny?"

"Sure he could!"

The sound of a woman's raised angry voice came from Fitch's office; then they could hear his placating murmur.

"Landed the Potter engagement, did you?" Greenwood asked in sudden excitement, as he glanced at the social notes.

"Yep."

"Scooped it?"

"I think so."

He never jealoused; no city editor ever did. But she knew how pleased he was when he said with a look that was almost a wink:

"All right. That'll make up for some of the rotten stories you've been turning in."

"I suppose so," said Tony, in superb scorn. "I'm about the best social editor you ever had a chance to bully, Greeny," she told him.

"But you won't get my hospital story for me, you don't want to faint in Market street?"

"I do not!" It reminded her of Larry and the comforting hour beside the fire that afternoon. "By the way," she said, "you followed up my Little City Hall story; here's something that may interest you: Lawrence Bellamy is going over to the Examiner with the Journal."

"What Journal?" Greenwood's voice was as swift as a bullet.

"There's only one. His Journal. The Journal of Commerce and Business."

"Who said so?"

"He did. I know him and his wife quite well. I saw him today, and he told me. They're going to have a weekly supplement, and then he's to do a daily column."

"Got your Sunday column in?" he asked, in a flat voice.

"Hour ago."

"What's keeping you? It's almost ten."

"I'm going with Van to get some oysters."

The lights of Market street were caught in the long lines of the softly falling rain; the pavements glittered black; the air was deliciously fresh to Tony's lungs. She and Van had their oysters; Van talked about a girl named Frances. She was a swell girl, but her family was terrible. She had a mother that could talk the roof off the Bliss building.

Tony absorbed the hot, heartening food and thought her own thoughts. Barney Kerr wanted her to go to dinner with his family in Piedmont on Sunday; she did not want to go, but the boat left home, he would ask her again to marry him; he was constantly asking her, now, or rather he was giving her those strong hints that mean that a man is anxious to put the direct question to the test again. None of it seemed significant any more, or even interesting. Tony couldn't take it seriously; she couldn't take seriously anything that wasn't the newspaper office and the old typewriters, lounging or excited men, the atmosphere of blue smoke and ink and pencil dust. And tonight she had to keep coming back to the warm little secret memory of that moment with Larry in the hall.

When she reached home she told Brenda that she was not going to the Kerrs' on Sunday.

CHAPTER XI

It was good to awaken in the silent spring morning, rested and content, with everything well in the best of all worlds. The clock's hands stood at nine when Tony opened her eyes; Brenda, dressed except for her jacket and hat, was packing a suitcase that lay open on the other bed.

"Santa Cruz today!" Brenda chanted. "My vacation was to begin two weeks from tomorrow, but the publishers' convention comes in there, and so they telephoned to ask me if I'll take it this week instead. And—and—" the older sister went on, folding pajamas, wrapping soap in tissue paper, dragging out her words into a singsong for the pleasure of saying them, "and so—Cliff has to drive down to Santa Cruz today, and—so—he's taking Margaret and Mary Rose and me, and are we going to have fun?"

"Oh, Brenda, how delicious, in this hot weather, before the fogs begin! And to drive down! Did they get the Ferguson cottage?"

"Oh, yes, right near the shore. Oh, my camera—"

She went off to get it, and Tony leaped from bed, snatched from a lower bureau drawer her fresh linen tennis frock and the lavender dotted swiss, tucked them hurriedly under the clothing Brenda had already packed in the bag, and slipped in two pairs of stockings and a white duck hat. She was back in bed again, the picture of innocence, when Brenda returned.

"Get up, lazy," said Brenda. "I haven't had my breakfast yet."

"See the paper?"

"Oh, yes, and I meant to tell you! Your engagement's signed, on the front page."

"Oh, Brenda," Tony said, actually pale, "on the front page, — and signed!"

She went out to the kitchen, where on the table, cleared from the three earlier breakfasts, were the cream and sugar, the empty cream cups, the bubbled newspaper.

Tony seized upon it, whirled pages. Ah-h-h! there it was, on the front page, with photographs. Miss Patricia Page Porte, a debutante of the season before last, and Mr. Lee Carnahan Scott, both members of the most exclusive Hillsborough set, were about to announce to their friends one of the year's most interesting engagements. Tony felt a delicious thrill of pride, presently tinged, but only pleasantly, with fear. Suppose they got mad and denied it? But no, said her common sense. They couldn't do that. They would just be angry for a while at the premature announcement, as many another person had been, and then accept the situation with whatever philosophy they might.

Tony had propped up the paper where she could feast her eyes on it. She drank her orange juice slowly.

"Is Antoinette Tait, the great newspaper woman, within?" said Clifford, at the door. "Hello, Antoinette!" he said, coming in.

"Cliff—you saw it! And it's a scoop, too!"

"The other papers haven't got it?"

"Absolutely not."

"Well, congratulations," Cliff said, smiling. He joined his sisters in a second breakfast; the kitchen was full of pleasantness and youth and excitement this morning, and for Tony at least the day lent the thrilling taste of success.

She and Brenda expertly disposed of the kitchen disorder, and Brenda went back with Tony to the bedroom, putting on her hat, taking her shabby old topcoat on her arm; her gloves, her bag, her suitcase. Meanwhile Tony started bath water running, and wandered about, assisting her sister with small last gifts and advice.

"Good-bye, darling, be a good girl, and leave the marines alone. I'll take care of Bruce and write you every other day."

Going back into the apartment, Tony remembered suddenly that she had promised to telephone Ruth Bellamy.

She dialed the familiar number a moment later, humming as she did do.

"Hello, Mimi. Is Mrs. Bellamy there? It's Miss Tait."

"Just a moment, Miss Tait." Mimi's slow feet retreating; and then a muffled, distant: "Is that you, Tony?"

"Is that you, Ruth?" Tony returned in turn, her voice surprised and uneasy. For Ruth's tone bespoke calamity of some sort. "What's the matter?"

"Nothing. Only I feel rather sick over the whole affair," Ruth said.

"What affair? What's happened?"

"Oh, that Journal and Examiner thing getting out, Tony. It's just well, Larry's trouble. He knows we both know," Ruth said bitterly. "But it wasn't you. Don't worry about that. But he feels terribly. He had a telephone from the chief early this morning; that's the way we knew. They were all wild, of course. It had been absolutely confidential! Now the whole thing may be off. Larry says he'll have to take any terms they offer. He's gone to New Orleans alone an hour ago. And here's something he very much wanted you to do for him. He wants to

Has He "A Right?"

Judge Ben Lindsey, of Memphis, Tenn., contends that "a man has a right to get drunk two or three times." The judge halted a divorce hearing, according to the press story, after a wife's attorney told how the defendant got drunk occasionally. The court ruled that only habitual drunkenness is ground for divorce, so the wife shifted her charge to cruelty and the divorce was granted.

Well, perhaps the judge had reason for his opinion but there is something to be said for the wife's side, too, one is inclined to believe. The Harvard student who recently was expelled for his drunken assault on a dormatory janitor was probably not yet a habitual drinker, but the janitor who must go through life with only one eye could hardly be expected to agree with the judge. Neither could the seven-year-old child who lies in a hospital struggling to recover after the loss of one leg to what a hit and run drunken driver crushed her against the curb in front of her own home.

The word "remedy" of alcohol is not exactly as effect on the drinker. One media feel quite justified in saying that if any individual wants personal liberty to dull his brains or to commit "hum cide, after he has reached the age of accountability — let him have it. "Correctional" spees! But what of the right of the janitor, and the child — in short what about the rights of society?

MICHIGAN, YOUR HEALTH

Today, with the New Year still several days in the future, the Michigan Tuberculosis Association reports that already it has received requests from twenty-six counties for tuberculin test and X-ray clinics during 1936. The requests represent 67,780 subjects, the association explains. At the same time, news dispatches from tuberculosis Christmas seal headquarters in Lansing inform us that there are still hundreds of Michigan people who have yet to make returns from Christmas seals received. It is not a difficult matter to arrive at the correct conclusion.

Tuberculin and X-ray clinics — as well as the numerous other anti-tuberculosis activities of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association — are financed through the sale of Christmas seals. The scope of the association program is dependent each year upon the generosity of Michigan people. And so, unless returns not yet received are forthcoming soon, it will become necessary to curtail somewhat the program planned for 1936.

With the sch children of today rests the futu ith of Michigan. Tuberculin tes d chest X-rays — modern weapo ainst tuberculosis will do muc alter the fact that the White Pla is today causing more deaths be en the ages of 20 and 40 than any other disease. While tragedies occur in that particular age span, it is in the earlier 'teen age that tuberculosis gains its foothold. Tuberculin tests and chest X-rays make possible early discovery and, consequently, early cure.

It is not too late to mail your contribution. It may save a life. It will undoubtedly make for a healthier Michigan.

MICHIGAN TREES

So emphatic were the protests by conservationists throughout the state, the State Conservation Commission has voted to rescind a previous order allowing free cutting of merchantable timber and pulp wood in state forests. This latest action by the Commission prohibits for an indefinite period any danger to timber spoilation by outside interests on state-owned lands. Credit for this change in attitude is largely due to the single-handed battle waged by Al Weber, publisher of the Cheboygan Observer, and himself a great lover of outdoor life and beauty. It was the Cheboygan editor who first called state wide attention to the value of timber for recreational and other purposes, asking that a thorough investigation be made before any timber cutting contracts were entered into. The report of the investigators was unanimous in sustaining his contentions and the restraining order followed.

ALL HANDS ON DECK!

The summer night was fine and clear, perhaps a time for love's young dream, his sweetie with him in the car, a world with romance all a'gleam; a clinging vine who nestled near, as down the country lane they sped, what mattered else to he or she, with visions of the day they'd wed? With puckered lips to tempt the bear, a promise deep of sweetest bliss, no wonder that the gump leaned over, with thoughts intent to steal a kiss. It would be better if we tried, the rest of the from you to shield, the sorry sight of lad and lass, as any of Farmer Jones' field they toted. What need to paint a moral out, why try with words this tale adorn, nobody heeds a thing you say, for every day a fool is born; still of your gal you must embrace, if you would smack her rosy lips, draw up beneath some wayside bough, where there's no danger of eclipse. For whether she be young or old, this siren tempter of your zeal, you'll find a modern kiss more safe, with both hands on the steering wheel.

FIRESIDE TOPICS

Analysts of the congressional vote in the Third District promises to be a favorite topic for discussion by the political wiseacres during the long winter evenings ahead. Naturally there will be wide divergence of opinion. Already the successful candidate is reported showing a strong disposition to repudiate Townsendism, an issue directly responsible for his large primary vote, if not in the general election. Eventually Congressman Main will discover that trying to sidestep his endorsement of the California old age pension plan, made early in the primary campaign, is a trick that better be left to a circus acrobat. His every act in Congress will be closely watched by those who cast their ballots for him in the belief he would champion their cause at Washington. Failure to do this will bring recruitment at the polls next year. Meanwhile we can expect thousands of seekers for public office adopting his platform. That does not augur well for representative government.

ALBINO MUSKRAT TAKEN BY MARCELLUS TRAPPER

An albino muskrat was displayed at Marcellus recently by Ansell Manning, Cass county trapper. It was sent to the Department of Conservation at Lansing. Some persons believe that an albino muskrat would be specially valuable because of its white fur but, as a matter of fact, fur from albinos, or albinos generally, is worthless.

A astonishing conspiracy of society leader to rule a servant girl of her "love child" related in The American Weekly, the magazine distributed with next Sunday's Chicago Herald and Examiner.

FEDERAL SPENDING IS TWICE NATION INCOME

Expenditures During 1935 Set a Record for Peace Time

Expenditures of the federal government during 1935 were approximately double its income and set another peace time spending record, year end treasury figures showed.

The full year 1935, representing the last half of the 1935 fiscal year and the first half of the 1936 fiscal year, saw the treasury spend $7,612,167,954 and collect $3,857,394,194 in revenues. This left a deficit for the period of $3,755,073,760, which was met either by borrowing or by draft on the treasury's cash and bank deposit.

On a per capita basis the federal government spent in 1935 approximately $60 for every man, woman and child in the country; collected in revenues, mostly from taxes, $30 per person and borrowed nearly $30 per person to make up the difference.

In the last half of 1935, representing the first half of the 1936 fiscal year, expenditures were further ahead of revenues than in the first half of 1935. Expenses in the six months ended December 31, 1935, amounted to $3,781,860,702; revenues to $1,902,009,509, and the deficit to $1,879,851,193. This compared with expenditures in the last half of 1934 of $3,545,017,934; receipts of $1,845,082,517 and a deficit of $1,699,935,397.

DECEMBER SALES TAX SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

Sales tax collections during December, for the month of November, amounted to $3,891,527, it was announced by Director Joseph W. Fenchey. This is an increase of $1,125,458 over November, 1934.

Total collection of the three per cent levy for the last six months of 1935 were $21,620,119, $3,625,617 more than for the same period in 1934.

MINISTERIAL GROUP MEETING HERE MONDAY

Dinner and Fine Program Was Held at the Methodist Church

Charlevoix was the Mecca Monday for a goodly number of clergymen of this northern region, when the Little Traverse Bay Ministerial Association met in the Methodist church for a noon dinner and program.

The women of the Aid Society served a fine meal. The president presided and introduced the speaker, Carl Spitler, superintendent of Petoskey public schools, who gave a very fine address on "Character Education."

Supt. O. P. North, of Charlevoix schools, was guest of honor and all took part in the discussion which followed the address, which was really a masterful effort on the above topic.

The next meeting probably will be the first Monday in February, and will be in the East Jordan Methodist church.

NEW MARKET IS FOUND FOR MICHIGAN'S BEANS

Ten carloads of Michigan beans are moving to San Francisco canners, via Baltimore and the Panama Canal. This is the first quantity sale ever made of Michigan beans to this company. The purchasing agent of the cannery told the Michigan sales agency that Michigan beans were exactly what this company wanted.

The sale is very encouraging as California grown beans have been one of the chief competitors with the Michigan product. Assurance was given by the buyers that larger quantities would be bought if the present shipment meets expectations.

The Second Hand Store, operated opposite the court house, a partnership by Harry Coblentz and E. S. Link, has been taken over by Mr. Coblentz.

AMERICAN LEGION ACTIVITIES

The post now has around 90 members.

Charter for the Sons of the American Legion has been okayed by department headquarters of the Legion and the charter is daily expected from national headquarters at Indianapolis. Membership cards in the new organization are already at hand, ready to be issued.

The post voted, Tuesday evening, to send flowers for the funeral of the late John Smith, well known local octogenerian. While not a veteran, Mr. Smith took a great interest in the post especially, the bugle and drum corps and was always on hand at Memorial Day and Fourth of July exercises to take part in the parades with his drum, on which he was an expert performer.

A letter was recently received by the adjutant from A. J. Schmidt, sales promotion manager of the Dexter Company, manufacturers of home laundry equipment, at Fairfield, Ia. Mr. Smith, it will be remembered was the victim of a serious accident a month or so ago, due to a fall at the Northern Auto garage which resulted in his being forced to spend some time in the hospital here. The members of the local post took pains to see that he was visited and contributed somewhat to his comfort during his convalescence and, as a Legionnaire, Mr. Smith appreciated the attentions he received and expressed such appreciation in his letter. To quote him in part: "I have come to realize that there is no such thing as being 'a stranger in a strange town' if you are a member of the American Legion and if there is a post of that national organization in the town."

The paddlefish is the queerest and rarest of all Michigan fish. It has a long, oar-like snout and is known to have been taken only once in Michigan waters.

The Enduring Ingredient

EVEN the stoutest cedar pole must at length succumb to weather and wear. New methods surpass — and replace — the old. Equipment disappears as progress renders it obsolete.

There is, however, one factor in your telephone service that never alters: one important ingredient that survives all the effects of the passing years — and this is the factor of policy.

The policy of this Company is to supply Michigan with the best and most economical telephone service that human effort and sincerity can provide. To accomplish this purpose, there has been a long series of changes — including changes — that grew out of American inventive genius as applied to the art of telephonic communication.

A noteworthy example of this is seen in the evolution of the cable. Year by year a greater number of wires — each an avenue of speech — has been successfully packed into a smaller circumference. This, with many other improvements, has steadily widened the use of cable. Utilized at first only to link subscribers' telephones with central offices, storm-resistant cable is now used in toll circuits connecting cities, and in a large percentage of all present-day circuits.

This progressive change was not haphazard. It grew out of a policy which itself does not change. That is why telephone service in the State of Michigan is better today than it was yesterday. And that is why it will improve for tomorrow.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Sunday morning service, 10:45.

Meets first Wednesday evening each month at 7:15 p. m.

Reading room open Saturday, 3 to 5 p. m.

Sunday school, 12 o'clock.

We cordially invite the public to our service and reading room.

"Sacrament" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, January 12.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (Rev. 10:1, 2): "And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was on his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire: And he had in his hand a little book open."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 558): "This angel or message which comes from God, clothed with a cloud, prefigures divine Science. To mortal sense Science seems at first obscure, abstract, and dark; but a bright promise crowns its brow. When understood, it is Truth's prism and praise."

"Sea Shroud," A Daring Serial Story

Opening chapters of a serial novel, about the Secret Service at work on an island of peril, appear in The American Weekly with next Sunday's Detroit Times. An exciting novel of murder, mystery, romance and terror with a thrill in each chapter.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Health Education of the Pre-School Child

Build for health. That is the primary aim of all school health instruction.

The pre-school child is taught to build for health by training him to know the right kind of foods, to eat the right kind of foods, and to like the right kind of foods. He is taught to build for health by training him to follow the rules of the game in regard to sleeping with the windows open, brushing the teeth at least twice a day, bathing oftener than once a week, drinking milk instead of tea and coffee, drinking plenty of water, by eating some vegetables or fruit every day, and by playing out-of-doors every day. Health is not a goal; it is a long avenue to walk. That is why it is so necessary to begin early and to train children well.

Health teaching is primarily habit formation. Subject matter in textbooks may be used, but the essential thing in hygiene is the practice of health habits until they become automatic.

The worth of an educational process is measured by the results it achieves—the end product. Health education of the pre-school child is successful only in so far as it conserves and promotes the health of the child. The mere acquiring of knowledge is worthless unless it leads to hygienic habits of living. This means that health teaching must pave the way for school children to acquire a reserve force of energy, mental poise and whatever else is necessary for robust health. To meet these requirements it is necessary that children who enter school in first class condition should retain that condition, and those who do not enter in good condition should improve steadily. Such an achievement would contribute effectively to the child's progress in his studies at school.

The strategic time to begin health education is with the pre-school child before entering school. To start the child off on the right foot, an inventory should be taken at once to determine his assets and liabilities. A complete physical examination should be made either by the private physician or such work carried on by the District Health Department. It is well for one of the parents to be present at the examination, as this insures a common basis of understanding among those who are most vitally interested in the child's welfare.

Health education is trying to make children think health and live health, not merely to recite facts about health. To do an effective job, all the pre-school education should be built around health as the primary principle of education.

Knox how that thing leaked out. He says you can find out in the office; he can't. It's on the front page of the paper. You've seen the paper?"

Tony had listened so far in a state of suspended horror. Her wits were in a state of confusion. What had she done? Why had she come to it, and what was best to do now? They didn't suspect her, they were too generous. They were too honorable themselves to do that. Wouldn't it be decent of her not to undeceive them, not to let them know—

"I wish you could have seen the boss'am from the chief."

"What'd it say?"

"I'll read it to you. No, I can't; he took it. It said something about very much regretting that he had felt it necessary to discuss the proposed changes with persons he couldn't trust, and to see it as a front page full story, and that this—this must be considered as changing the entire basis of the negotiations. Something like that. Poor Larry!" Ruth said, "It was just pitiful to see how it upset him. But will you do that, Tony? I mean find out who gave it to the Call. Larry says he told absolutely no one. But now, listen," she broke off to repeat impressively, "we know that you didn't. Larry's going to tell the chief—that the only person to whom he talked at all was a friend who is like a member of his own family; she's not going to mention that you were a newspaper woman."

"Oh, I feel terribly about it," Tony said slowly, as the other woman paused. "I feel terribly."

"It seems such a pity! It's just made me feel sick!" Ruth lamented.

"What'll Larry be back?" Tony was trying to get her thoughts in order, trying to think what she could do.

"Let's see. And he's got to be on the [illegible] Tomorrow's Saturday. They go to press tonight."

Tony sat silent, thinking.

"Tony, are you there? Come up and have tea with me at five?"

"I guess they send me to the Fairfax Club across the bay. And I'm doing a lecture tonight."

Tony replaced the telephone on its stand, sat on in the little hallway, staring. Presently it would be half-past eleven, and Miss Betsy Ann Fleshingayser would be arrayed in her bridal white, and going to the Cathedral to be married to Johnnie Wood. And after that Tony must somehow go down to the office, somehow force herself to enter, somehow face Greeny. She had been betrayed—

And there was nothing to do, nothing to do, nothing to do! She had been feeling it a great joke to steal news, during these exciting months; now she knew how it felt to have it stolen.

She picked up the paper; forced her eyes to read the headlines. The story was placed right next to the engagement story. Views of Newspaper Men at Dinner Tonight. Chief Examiner Surprise Guests. To her excitement copy to scoop she had not seen it.

Tony put it down, it made her feel actually sick. She went out into the hot spring streets. At the newsstand there were other headlines; the afternoon papers had quoted the story. She walked up the street, turned east, and came out on the big avenue opposite the cathedral. The cars were already stopping there in a long file, and the wedding guests thronged up the great banked steps under an awning. Tony went with them.

"You would scoop the Porter girl

"Oh, What Did They Say?" Tony Murmured With a Sick Heart.

Tony," said Kate Oliver, from the Chronicle.

"How'd you do it?" Ann Wilde, of the Examiner, whispered.

"I'll probably go to jail for it," Tony whispered back.

"I've got the whole thing in our first edition," said Elsie Mooney of the afternoon paper. "Everyone knows it, anyway." Tony could draw a great breath of relief on that score, at least; they might be mad—the Scotts—and the Porters—but at least they weren't going to deny it and make a fuss.

"Maybe you think there isn't hell popping over our way on that Journal story," Ann said. "Nobody knew it; they say Pixley himself didn't know it."

"Oh, what did they say?" Tony murmured, with a sick heart.

"They said everything — and then some! Listen, Tony," Ann whispered, under cover of the first glorious strains of the wedding march, "who did spill it? Pixley's wild to know."

Tony could only acknowledge this with a wretched smile.

"The chief telephoned Moran," Ann whispered on, "and said that it was someone on Bellamy's side of it that spilled it. I hear Bellamy went down there this morning, dew."

CHAPTER XII

After the wedding Tony walked downtown slowly, languidly; the day was uncomfortably warm, and the noontime streets looked cheap and woodeny to her eyes. Greeny was in the office when Tony went in, but she took her place at her own desk without glancing his way. Presently Joe Burke came over to sit on the edge of her desk.

"That was a nice engagement you landed. See how we played it up? The other boys are wild."

"The other boys," always meant the editors and reporters of the rival papers. Tony raised somber eyes.

"That Journal story has just about ruined the finest friendship I have!" she said, breathing deep. She saw from Joe's expression that he knew how the land lay.

"Aw, well, Greeny had to use it?"

"He did not have to use it," Tony said warmly. "He knew very well he wasn't supposed to use it. If he'd thought I wanted him to use it he'd have asked me to write it."

Joe, looking intensely troubled, went away. To their turn Van and Spike and Buck Moore—Buck, who was next to Greeny in importance—came over shyly to present Greeny's case.

Tony took refuge in smouldering monosyllables. She was very busy, very oblivious of Greeny's neighborhood. Her heart was heavy; she could not rise to their kindly overtures.

Presently Greenwood came over to her.

"Well," he began soothingly, "you've certainly let us into a lot of trouble for that Porter engagement!"

"Oh, how?" Tony asked, startled.

"They talked to the old man."

"Fitch?"

"Nope. Arnoldson."

"Oh, they didn't!"

"They did. They wanted to know how you got it."

"The Bulletin had it tonight."

"Yes, but the Bulletin was careful to see that they were quoting from the Call."

"It's true," Tony said stubbornly.

"They say it isn't true. At least, we sent Bob Wiffeley up to see this Mrs. Scott, and she pretty near took his head off."

"Much ado about nothing," Tony said scornfully, returning to her work. The city editor lingered.

"I'm awfully sorry if I let you in for something with that Journal thing," he said awkwardly. "How'd I know it was a secret?"

Joe Penner Smothered by Beauties

It is only fitting that Sushabelh should be told about Joe Penner's last day on the "Collegiate" set at Paramount, because Sushabelle has been Joe's loved one for a long time.

In the past Joe has been known for such lines as "Wanna buy a duck?" and "Woe is me!" But in "Collegiate," which opens Saturday and Sunday, January 11-12, at the Palace Theatre, he abandons these phrases in favor of a new one. At the least provocation, in his new picture, Joe yells "Policeman!"

Variety Aids the Food Budget!

Somebody's always "taking the joy out of life," but I'm wondering how many have made out their 1936 food budgets that we discussed last week? If you have, you're over the first hurdle and now the next step is living up to it! I know it isn't easy to walk past a tempting window filled with rare assorted cheeses, especially if you suffer from a craving for them as I do, or pass a delicious thick steak for the more plebeian cuts, but it can be done and you'll be surprised at the satisfying dinners you can prepare that will make your family exclaim "My! That was a grand meal, Sue, but I bet we'll have to make up for it!" When that happens, you may pat yourself on the back and know that you've done a good job.

One trick that I have found helpful is to serve as much of a variety as possible, and not such large servings. One of the most satisfying and economical foods that you can combine in your menus for variety is bread! To many housewives there is not consideration given to this very important food—whatever is "in the house" is served day in and today out until it's merely a matter of course. Try serving a light and a dark bread one day; then the next vary this with raisin bread or toll. You might say, "How can I keep it fresh, or use all of it?" But that's very easily answered. When the bread gets a little old for use on the table, it can be toasted, made into main dishes, puddings, or put through the food chopper and made into crumbs. Just try this, and see for yourself that it works. I'm giving you today, several main dish recipes that I know will both please your family and your food budget! By the way, you will notice that you can use your bread crumbs in every one, one of these!

Stuffed Spare Ribs

2 sections spare ribs, ½ cup minced salt pork, ½ cup chopped onion, 1½ cups bread crumbs, 1 scant teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper.

Heat a frying pan, drop in the salt pork, and fry until crisp. Take out the bits from the grease and set them aside. Add onion and fry until golden brown. Add bread crumbs, crisp salt pork and seasoning. Blend well, wipe the pare rib sections and spread over one the dressing, covering with the other and fasten them together at the ends by sewing or tying. Rub outside with salt, pepper and flour. Place on rack in open roasting pan and stir in hot oven on both sides until golden brown. Reduce heat rapidly and cook until tender in a moderately slow oven 300 degrees F., about one hour. Remove the fastening, and serve on hot platter with parsley and radish for garnish. Make pan gravy.

Macaroni De Luxe

1 cup uncooked macaroni, cut in pieces, 2 cup grated American cheese, 1 cup chopped red and green pepper, 1 cup fresh bread crumbs, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon minced onion, 3 eggs, separated.

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and rinse in cold water. Combine the cheese, peppers, onion, crumbs and salt. Beat the egg yolks and add with the milk, blending carefully. Add the macaroni and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in moderate, even, 350 degrees F. oven 40 to 50 minutes, or until firm.

Lima Bean Loaf

2½ cups mashed lima beans, 2 eggs, beaten, 1 cup bread crumbs, ¾ teaspoon salt, dash of pepper, 1-3 teaspoon poultry seasoning, ½ teaspoon onion juice.

Toss together all the ingredients, and turn into greased bread pan. Pack down well. Bake for 30 minutes in a moderately hot oven 375 degrees F. Turn out onto a hot platter.

Rolled Flank Steak

1 pound flank or round steak, 2 potatoes, diced, 2 carrots diced, 2 onions sliced, 1 turnip, diced, 2 parsnips, diced, 1 cup tomatoes, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 table poon butter, 2 teaspoons salt, 2 tablespoons flour.

Pound the steak with the 2 tablespoons flour. Combine the bread crumbs, melted butter and 1 teaspoon salt and spread on dressing over the steak. Roll loosely and tie with wire strings. Sear quickly in a little hot fat until well brown. Arrange the vegetables in the baking dish, cover with the remainder of the salt and lay the meat roll on top. Add enough water to almost cover the meat, cover the baking dish and bake slowly one and one half to two hours, adding more moisture if necessary.

MICHIGAN FIRST IN ROAD PERCENTAGE

69.25 State's Relief Road Program Under Contract Seventh In Funds

Michigan today is still the No. 1 state in the Union in the percentage of its highway relief program now under contract or construction.

A compilation by the national publication, "American Highways," as of November 16, reveals that Michigan is far ahead of any other state in the utilization of federal relief funds on the highways.

On that date 69.25 per cent of Michigan's relief program was under contract or construction compared with a national average of only 21.74 per cent. The District of Columbia, which ranked second, had 55.75 per cent of its program under contract.

Other leading states were: Vermont, 48.1 per cent; Indiana, 46.61 per cent; Maine, 41.56 per cent; and Alabama and Arizona, 41.5 per cent each.

On November 16, State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner had placed $11,704,963 worth of federal relief projects under contract. The total federal grant to Michigan on the current construction program is $16,903,903. Since that date more than a $1,000,000 worth of projects have been added to the total under contract so that nine-tenths of the program is contracted for today.

Michigan ranks seventh in the amount of federal highway funds allotted to the various states. New York is operating under a $30,773,362 federal relief program to lead the nation. Only 29.6 per cent of the New York program, however, is now under contract.

Texas, $30,622,836 allocated and 26.4 per cent under contract; Pennsylvania, $26,179,472 and 12.6 per cent; Illinois, $24,161,889 and 23.1 per cent; Ohio, $20,676,147 and 15.6 per cent; California, $19,991,249 and 20.8 per cent. Connecticut has none of its program under contract while Massachusetts has contracted for less than three per cent of its program.

The compilation also revealed that approximately 10 per cent of the total amount of all projects in the country that were under contract as of November 16 were in Michigan.

The Michigan program was the first in the country approved by President Roosevelt. Commissioner Van Wagoner launched his program August 1.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES

Charlevoix and Ironton

On Sunday, December 8, 1935, Mr. Parker began a series of sermons based upon the "Apostles' Creed." This series was necessarily interrupted because of the holiday season and the quarterly communion service last Sunday. We will continue the series next Sunday morning and the subject will be "Jesus Christ, His Only Son."

Because of a change in the program at Ironton, in which the church service has been changed from 10 a. m. to 12:15, the service in Charlevoix will begin sharply at 11.

The Young Men's Union Bible Class that has been meeting at 12:15 for the past few weeks, will meet at 10:30. Much interest has been aroused in this class over subjects elected by the members. The subject that is under consideration at present is: "Does God Answer Prayer?" Other subjects that will follow in their order are: "Does Science Conflict With Religion?", "The Meaning of Baptism," "The Second Coming of Christ," "Sunday Observance In the Modern Day." There are many other subjects that will be announced in their turn. All young men who are not attending elsewhere are cordially invited to this service. G. R. Parker is the leader.

The annual meeting of the church will be held Tuesday, January 14. The Ladies' Aid Society has arranged for a potluck supper on that evening at 6:30. The business of the church will be taken care of immediately after.

FARM BOOKKEEPING MAKES RAPID GAIN

Operators Make Effort to Disclose Loss of Profit In Farm Business

One thousand three hundred eighty-six Michigan farmers in 61 counties turned bookkeeper in 1935, to keep a complete financial record of their farm business. The work will be carried on in 65 counties in 1936.

The financial record project is a part of the Farm Management Department, extension service of Michigan State College, and was started in 1929 in 38 counties. In this work the farmers keep financial records of their farm operations, together with such additional information as is necessary for a detailed analysis of their business. Every farmer enrolled as a project cooperator is visited on his farm during the summer by the local county agricultural agent and a representative of the Farm Management Department of the College. Present indications reveal that more than 1,200 farmers will complete their records for 1935.

The cooperating farmers are making a determined effort to study their business in a manner that will disclose to them any weakness in their farm organization or management practices. This knowledge will assist them in making such adjustments as will enable them to increase their financial returns.

The county agricultural agent sponsor the project in the various counties and interested farmers may enroll by seeing their local agent. The only cost to the farmer is the price of the account book, which any person may procure from the county agent or direct from the Farm Management Department. M. S. C. Household Accounts Books are also available.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

W. W. Hurd, Pastor

January 12: "Death, Progress, Liberty, and Christ." This address concludes with a short account of one of the most remarkable incidents in modern Christian history.

The pastor hopes to be able to speak, and if so, the topic will be as above, and also will include a certain letter and a "human interest story." Of course, this all may have to be changed.

The Club meeting this week Thursday with Mrs. Glen Ellis, on East Lincoln, with Mrs. Harry Gehean as assistant hostess.

The Aid Society will meet next week. Watch for further notice.

Next Sunday the Youth Movement young people entertain the young people of the Northern Group in an "Old Oaken Bucket Picnic," from 4:30 to 7. At the last meeting, held in Petoskey in November, over 100 were in attendance. For this meeting there will be a worship service, a social hour with refreshments, and a program of games and stunts, for which Miss Walters has agreed to assist.

Mrs. Hurd's "turkey party," last Friday, for the Aid Society, was largely attended, and was a very happy social affair.

Send your children to church, as well as to Sunday school. They have junior church which is good for them.

BAPTIST CHURCH

We are looking forward with great anticipation to the Mid Year Associational Meeting, which will be held here next Friday, January 17.

TAX DEADLINE EXTENDED BY CITY COUNCIL

BOUNTY TRAPPING RESULTS ARE REVIEWED

Trappers Take Many Coyotes But Fall Short on Number of Wolves

The county system of predatory animal control, put into effect a year ago, cost Michigan $32,115.50 for the first 11 months of the past year.

State Conservation authorities at Lansing believe that when all reports are received for December, the total cost for the full year will not exceed the amount authorized to finance the bounty system for 1935, which was $40,600.

Up to November 30 of 1935, the bounty hunters in Michigan had accounted for a total of 3,791 predators and Conservation authorities believe that this figure may top the 4,000 mark when the December reports are totalled.

Adult coyote pelts made up most of the predator take for the first 11 months of 1935, the total being 2,575. Bounties were paid on 1,012 bobcat pelts, 179 coyote-pup pelts, 24 wolf pelts and one wolf pup pelt.

The year of highest take under the state trapper system was 1934 when the trapper system was in effect 11 months. Included in the catch for that period were 1,029 coyote pelts and 53 wolf pelts.

The number of wolf pelts so far certified for bounty payments has not equalled the wolf catch of any of the six years under the state trapper plan.

INCOME TAX DEADLINE IS EXTENDED

Returns, In Duplicate, Must Be Filed by Midnight March 16

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue announced today that income tax returns for the calendar year 1935 were released to the public on January 2, 1936. Telegraphic instructions have been sent to all collectors of internal revenue, 64 in number, authorizing them to commence distributing the forms on that date.

The period for filing returns for the calendar year 1935 begins on January 1 and ends at midnight on March 16, 1936. Ordinarily the time within which to file calendar year returns ends at midnight on March 15 but as that day falls on Sunday in 1936, the taxpayers may file returns until midnight, March 16.

To carry out the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1935, it will be necessary this year to file income tax returns in duplicate. The duplicate forms have been printed on green paper.

HORSE BREEDERS PLAN EXHIBIT AT 1936 SHOW

Display Is Expected to Bring Keen Competition In Next Exposition

Michigan horsebreeders, encouraged by their success in 1935, have voted to make another exhibit at the 1936 International Livestock Exposition.

Eighteen Michigan farmers, it was announced at a meeting of breeders recently, exhibited 43 animals at the exposition last year, and won 40 ribbons. The Michigan exhibit was awarded first place as the neatest and most attractive exhibit at the exposition. The premium money and expenses were so prorated as to make it possible for individual farmers to exhibit their animals, and it is expected that competition will be keen to get horses in at the 1936 show.

The Michigan Horse Breeders' Association, working with the Department of Agriculture and Michigan State College supported the exhibit and appropriated funds sufficient to care for the expenses, so that exhibitors were not at any great financial outlay.

Speakers at the meeting in which the decision for 1936 was made were James Thomson, commissioner of agriculture; Gus Carton, in charge of fairs; Harry Kelly, superintendent of exhibits, Michigan State Fair; and Prof. G. A. Brown, head of the animal husbandry department, Michigan State College.

JOYOUS HOLIDAY SEASON COMES TO AN END

Schools Resumed Monday—Vacation Period Full of Activity

The holidays are over. Schools resumed Monday after two weeks vacation and the holiday outdoor decorations have disappeared.

Students completed one of the most enjoyable holiday seasons. For the older groups there was social activity throughout the two week vacation and for the younger group there has been both snow and ice for enjoyment.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

A cold spell is quickly felt in the higher prices of perishable foods, particularly butter, eggs, vegetables and fruits. As soon as supplies become normal prices drop back. Since increasing supplies of eggs are the rule at this season, higher egg prices are bound to be temporary.

Market prices invite the housewife to serve plenty of salads, for lettuce is cheap. Several varieties of greens are also seasonable and inexpensive. Meat and poultry prices tend to be firm but the simpler and less expensive cuts have additional appeal after rich holiday fare.

Apples and the citrus fruits are the chief values in the fruit market.

Low Cost Dinner

Round Steak, Baked Potatoes
Glazed Carrots
Bread and Butter
Rice Pudding
Tea or Coffee, Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

Roast Lamb, Browned Potatoes
Mashed Turnips, Cole Slaw
Bread and Butter
Orange Cream
Tea or Coffee, Milk

Very Special Dinner

Tomato Juice, Stuffed Celery
Broiled Beefsteak
Mashed Potatoes, Broccoli in Cream
Hearts of Lettuce
Rolls and Butter
Lemon Pie
Coffee

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

Farm Account Books Available Free of Charge

A quantity of farm account books developed by the federal government are now available free of cost. This book, while it is not as complete as the regular farm account book supervised by the extension service, will permit recording all transactions during the year. It is not meant to be a complicated system.

It would seem desirable for every farm family to have one of these books. Too many farmers are not keeping any records whatsoever of the receipts and expenditures, which always add up to a sizable sum. These books will be gladly sent to any one in the county who is interested.

In addition to the farm account books, we will have several home account books which will enable any farm family to know exactly what part of their living comes from the farm, the cash expenditures for food and clothing, etc. These home account books will cost 20 cents per copy. Kindly send your name in if you want one or both of these books.

Typewriters for sale or rent by week, month. Reasonable terms. Inquire this office.—22tf.

CHARLEVOIX WINS HARBOR CONTEST

SCORED 20 TO 16 VICTORY FRIDAY NIGHT

Play on Home Court Twice This Week—Traverse Here Wednesday, Alpena Friday Night

Charlevoix's Red Rayders moved up a notch in the Little Eight basketball conference standing with a 20 to 16 win at Harbor Springs last Friday night. It was their second conference victory of the season.

Overcoming a four-point Harbor margin in the first period, the Rayders moved into a 10 to 8 lead at the half and maintained a slight advantage throughout the remaining two periods.

Carey, forward, was high for Charlevoix with seven points, while Hovey, Graham and Barkus divided Harbor's scoring with four points each.

Charlevoix's reserves hung up another victory on the double bill, scoring a 29 to 14 win. Neff and Richardson tied for high score.

The Red Rayders appear twice on the home court this week in games which promise to provide the feature basketball attractions of the season.

The first contest Wednesday evening (tonight) brings Traverse City's Class B Trojans here for a return game. The visitors nipped the Rayders on their home court in a game which was the first of the season for both teams. The score was 21 to 18. In view of the closeness, fans are looking forward to the Rayders coming through with a victory on their home hardwood.

The second basketball contest of the week, scheduled for Friday evening, brings the Class B Alpena outfit here for their first appearance on a Charlevoix court. In view of the fact Alpena has one of the strongest aggregations in the Big Six conference this season, the outcome of the game will show the strength of the Rayders while at the same time bring a new team here.

CHURCH SOCIETY HAO ANNUAL MEET

CONGREGATIONALISTS ELECTED OFFICERS TUESDAY

Reports of Departments Showed Good Financial Condition; Numerous Improvements During Year

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held Tuesday evening, January 14. Before the business session a rooperative supper was served by the Ladies' Aid Society.

Reports from the different departments showed a healthy condition, probably the best financial year the church has had in several years. The annual meeting found all bills paid and a balance on hand. During the year the church was painted under direction of the Ladies' Aid Society, a new room was built on the southwest corner by boys of Earl Young's class.

The Sunday school enrollment is the same as 1934, but there had been a good increase in attendance. The pastor reported an increase in the number of funerals, 30 in all, and a decrease in weddings at which he had been called to officiate. Besides his regular work, he had been called out of town for several speaking engagements. Thirteen united with the church during the year.

The following officers were elected: Clerk, Mrs. E. L. Dawson; treasurer, D. H. PLANNING BEAUTIFUL THRONE FOR QUEEN

Petoskey Will Construct Elaborate Layout for 1936 Carnival

Plans disclosed by P. T. Marshall, Petoskey city manager, should result in an outstanding tribute to both the Queen and to Petoskey for the Ninth Annual Winter Carnival to be held February 7-16.

A large ice surface will be elevated two feet above the level of the rink for the figure skaters to display their ability. Direct to the rear and still four feet higher will be the dais for the Queen and members of the court. Jagged and irregular stacks of clear ice will be set in front of the walls of the various surfaces of the throne. Lighting equipment, as tentatively planned, will be something entirely original and will allow a gradual changing of the shades of light on the throne.

QUEEN'S CROWNING PRETTY CEREMONY

HONOR BESTOWED ON FRANCES MARSHALL FRIDAY NIGHT

Illuminated Ice Throne Provided Beautiful Setting for Ceremony Queen's Ball Brilliant Party

Miss Frances Marshall was crowned Charlevoix Winter Queen last Friday night at a ceremony which far surpassed in beauty and setting any previous outdoor winter activity ever attempted in this city.

Arthur L. Fitch, local attorney, placed the crown on Miss Marshall's head following an appropriate coronation address. A beautiful ice throne, illuminated with colored lights, provided the setting for the affair. The queen's court and two maids of honor were in attendance. Queen Frances, in a brief statement, thanked the public for the honor bestowed upon her and added a wish for success of winter sports in Northern Michigan. It was estimated nearly 2,000 persons witnessed the affair.

Music during and preceding the ceremony was furnished by the city band and an amplifying system arranged by the Radio-Electric Appliance Shop.

Following the coronation, an exceptional exhibition of fancy skating in singles, doubles and groups was presented by members of the Petoskey Figure Skating Club. Queen Frances and Robert Ashton teamed in a popular waltz number. Wilson J. McDonald, secretary of the Petoskey Winter Sports Club, announced the program.

Equally a colorful was the Winter Queen's Ball, the climaxing feature of the evening's program at the school gymnasium, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Over 200 couples danced to the music of Wexstaff's orchestra, and these, together with a larger number in the balcony, witnessed the introduction of Queen Frances and saw her lead the grand march.

An added delightful feature of the program was tap dance numbers given by Marjorie Edwards and Bobby Wexstaff.

The unqualified success of the evening's activities is a distinct credit to members of the committee in charge, whose names have been previously announced.

LARGE GATHERING METHODIST RALLY

Young People from Adjoining Towns Here Sunday Evening

Sunday evening the dining room of the Methodist church was crowded to capacity when the Youth Movement group entertained similar groups from adjoining towns. In spite of the near-blizzard, there were 131 present. This is the largest crowd yet, 110 being present two months ago at Petoskey.

The pastor here had fine cooperation from the committees. Much of the success was due to the early hour—from 4:30 to 7—because of the short days, dangerous driving, etc.

The social hour was featured by games and stunts provided by Miss Walters, which were very clever. Miss Iva Howe led in chorus singing, and the pastor had the devotional service. The invocation was given by the Rev. C. E. Pollock, and all local people were delighted to have him with us again. The Misses Chew sang a beautiful duet, and Leslie Shapton gave two very fine instrumental numbers. One enjoyable feature was the request trio, recently sung at the high school, by Miss Frances Marshall, Charlevoix winter sports queen, and Miss Ernestine Chew and Miss Iva Howe. The main address was given by Dr. F. F. McMillan — "Playing the Game as a Doctor Sees It." This was in many ways a masterpiece, in its very appropriate adaptation to young men, and would be a credit to any audience, anywhere.

Otto Morse, who was taken ill December 13th with partial paralysis and heart trouble, is now recovering, so as to be able to sit up in a wheel chair. His illness has been the occasion for our not writing the last four weeks. He had just nicely got settled in his residence adjoining his store up on M-88 when he was taken ill. It did not seem much like a "merry Christmas" this year, and Friday, the 13th, will always be remembered as a gloomy day.

We people on the county road off from 88, north, certainly appreciate the efforts of the Antrim county road commission to keep the highway clear of snow. A delegation from this place went down to see the commission last week Tuesday in regards to keeping the roads open. The commission went to Lansing this week to make an effort in getting money to finance the proposition. Here's hoping they succeed, for the roads were certainly in bad condition the first of the week.

James Dawson and Si Carpenter have erected a saw mill on the James Dawson farm at Bay View, north of here, and will cut shingles and lumber for the farmers this winter. Mr. Carpenter brought over his gasoline engine from Bellaire to run the mill. Mr. Dawson's steam engine is in storage at Elk Rapids awaiting the government's promise to give him a job on M-31 next spring, which was postponed from this winter to next spring. It is hoped that it will not be declared "unconstitutional."

We take this means of thanking all those who so kindly assisted in caring for our relative in time of illness, and all who inquired in regard to his health, and also to those who called. Many thanks are due those who assisted in the Christmas exercises at Creswell, Turners and Grand View. Mrs. Vivian McLachlan at Creswell, Mrs. Oliver McGuire and Mrs. Harter, Eldon Telgenhoff and wife, Misses Goldie and Florence DeForest at Grand View; Misses Eda Hill, Eleanor Patton and Phyllis Hale at Turners gave material assistance. There were 27 in attendance at Creswell, 30 at Turners, and 55 at Grand View. Especial thanks should be given to Rev. Weaver, who spent so much time and money in remembrances to the children. He writes that the winter will soon be over and he expects to reorganize all Sunday schools again in the spring. Over 2400 Christmas gifts were sent out by him to the several schools.

BARNARD

The Ladies' Aid Society meets this week with Mrs. George Black. The meeting scheduled for last week was postponed on account of the death of Mr. Robert Gregory.

The first real blizzard of the winter came on Sunday, and Monday morning found the roads all blocked, making it difficult for the high school pupils to get to school and the mail carriers to make their route.

County Agent Mellencamp visited Barnard school on Friday on the interest of the 4-H Clubs. A boys' handicraft and girls' sewing clubs have been organized with Carlton Smith and Dorothy Bottemiller acting as leaders.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

Machinery School Well Attended

The third machinery school held in this county was very favorably received by approximately 90 folks who were interested in farm machinery. Mr. Bell, agricultural engineer from the Michigan State College, was in charge of the demonstration and gave an illustrated talk on how to adjust a mowing machine and also many troubles that commonly affect grain binders.

In the case of the mowing machine many adjustments were suggested and recommended that were unknown to most farmers. The machine itself has been developed very efficiently and when in adjustment will be 100 per cent efficient, but when out of adjustment causes many parts to wear out far too early. Then again each farmer had the opportunity of seeing the machine torn down and the parts replaced. Practically every farmer had one or two problems to discuss with Mr. Bell. In most cases these were solved and the remedy recommended.

Efforts will be made for a similar meeting for next year, possibly on other types of farm machinery. Also if there is enough interest in the county, a sewing machine school may be held. Under this set-up it is possible for Mr. Bell to handle 10 or 12 machines a day. Fortunately most machines only need adjusting and not many new parts. It will be of interest to be noted, this type of school will be conducted next fall.

4-H Club Work Expanding Rapidly

Already 13 clubs are carrying on their work actively with several more yet to organize. Thus far there are three handicraft clubs with 29 members, four hot lunch clubs with 46 members, six clothing clubs with 62 members, and six community clubs with 65. To this list will be added clubs from Wildwood Harbor school, Woodward community, Deer Lake, and Ramsey school.

In the case of a community club, both the boys and girls in the same community organize a one group. We find this type of organization is becoming more popular every year. Further we note greater interest in the hot lunch project. In this activity the club members prepare a hot dish to be served during the noon hour to supplement the cold lunch. The club members discuss classes of food, selection of foods, table etiquette, and the table arrangement.

At the present time the following communities are carrying on some phase of the winter program: Hopyard, Marion Center, Hilton, Clark, Barnard, McGeagh, East Jordan, Bay Shore, Undine, Phelps, Walloon Lake, Clarion and Twinler.

In special recognition to the outstanding service rendered, a gavel was presented to the Charlevoix Kiwanis Club for their splendid cooperation during last summer. At the last Grange meeting, at Barnard, a lovely pen and pencil set was awarded to Carlton Smith for his outstanding leadership ability. Miss Lorena Bruntnall, of East Jordan, has been selected as the county all-around champion. She has carried on the outstanding club program during the year 1935. In addition, she won two trips to the State Fair at Detroit. This award carries with it a scholarship to the Michigan State College which may be used at any time she desires to take advantage of it. Further news of the club program will follow shortly.

"It doesn't matter," Tony said wearily, soberly. "Only the Bellamys happen to be my best friends."

"Well, listen. If Danielson sends for you—"

"Danielson!" Her heavy eyes lighted with horror. Flo Danielson was the assistant manager: nervous, critical, was the most disliked man on the staff.

"Oh, about this accursed Scott thing!" Greeny said, walking away. Tony sat on at her desk in a state of complete terror.

Old Mrs. Maglns, with another of the "Betsy Ross" sentimentalities, wandered in. Everyone liked her and made much of her; she called Mr. Arnoldson "Willie," and was Mrs Danielson's aunt. Usually she bored Tony into evading her, but Tony was in no mood to decline any friendly overtures tonight and smiled at her encouragingly. For once, however, old "Betsy Ross" was not responsive, and left the office after a short conversation with Greeny.

"She's mad because her daughter left for China today and we didn't give it any space," Arch Shosser told Tony. Tony made a despairing exclamation: she had made a note of this event, she had meant to play it up prominently, to please the all-powerful "Betsy Ross," and she had completely forgotten it!

A few moments later the dreaded call came: a frowzy boy went by her desk saying casually: "Mr. Danielson's office, please, Miss Taft."

The eyes of all the office sympathetically upon her, she went slowly to the hallway and dragged her way downstairs to the manager's office, telling herself darkly that she was probably fired.

It was not so bad as that, but it was bad enough. Mr. Danielson was disagreeable; he was always disagreeable. He said that he disliked the sensational manner of getting social notes that Miss Taft had recently been employing; it was not the policy of the paper to make powerful enemies, and his own theory had always been to get what people were willing to give and nothing else.

"These are the nicest people in the city," he reminded her, "and usually our social reporter is—ahem! one of themselves, someone who understands how persons of that class feel—"

"I hope you break out with typhoid," Tony thought, her cheeks very red, her eyes bright, as she respectfully watched him. She was of a class that couldn't understand society folk, was she? After a while he said, "That was all, I think," and she could get up and go, feeling whipped and broken. Not one of them had really stood by her: not Greeny, who had been so pleased with the scoop, nor Flick, whose love affairs she had countenanced against her own better judgment, nor Danielson, who usually came on periodically and bore the whole office with accounts of his own adventures in bagging important scoops.

She went back to her desk. Nobody looked up when she came in, but she knew that everybody saw her.

"Aren't you going to get any dinner, Tony?" Greeny called. "You're covering that Federated Clubs thing, aren't you?"

"That isn't until nine, she began to say thickly, and putting her head down on the desk she burst into tears. Nobody said anything: she knew that they were all transfixed between natural distaste for the weakness of women, and sympathy for her in a day whose dismal emotions they all had experienced in their turn.

After a dreadful moment or two Tony regained command of herself, stood up, and gathering her notes, took them to the city editor's desk. "I'm going out to dinner," she said, almost inaudibly.

The street was almost deserted. Tony walked blindly along, sniffling, blowing her nose, talking half aloud. Now and then, when the burden of her thoughts became insufferable, she stopped short, writhing with anguish. That vile Porter engagement—

Ah, yes, but then there was the Journal affair, too. That was more serious. Just the time last night, everything had been so joyous and so happy, and now her whole life was a wreck. Ruth had cared for Larry, had trusted her, and she had betrayed their trust!

Tired, sick, hungry, unevenly undecided, as she lurched in the dark street, her eyes fell upon a lead metal shield in a doorway: "The San Francisco Journal of Commerce and Business; Third Floor." For a moment she stood looking at it apathetically; then suddenly her heart began to beat rapid and fast. She went in.

She stopped, halfway up the second flight, and stood listening. Someone was talking at a telephone, upstairs. In the Journal office, she knew that voice: Larry's voice.

The door of the outer office, where she had waited so patiently a year ago, was open. The inner door was ajar, and Larry's office for the second time.

He looked up and she stood there looking at him without smiling, her face pale and streaked with tears.

"Tony, what is it?" he said, after a minute. He got up and came around the flat-topped big desk. "What's the matter?"

She had stretched out her hands; his met them, and as she felt their heartening grip and saw the concern and kindness in his eyes her tears began again.

"Oh, Larry, I've been so sorry!" she faltered, clinging to him.

"Sorry? For what?"

"Oh, for what I let you in for! I'd no idea it mattered so! You know," Tony said, close against him, looking up into his face with the lashes of her blue eyes pointed with tears, "you know I told them, Larry, I told Greeny! This morning, when Ruth spoke about it, I didn't want her to know. She said you wouldn't believe I had! But I did."

There was a pause.

"I know you did," he said.

"Oh, Larry, I've been feeling so horribly! I'm so sorry!"

"Look here," he interrupted, "have you been worrying about this Journal thing?"

"I've been sick!" she whispered.

"Sit down, you poor bird-brain!" Larry said. He wheeled a revolving chair to the nearer side of the desk, went about to his own side of the desk, and sat down, smiling at her. "Listen," he said, "what's all this about?"

"I told Greeny; I had no idea he'd use it." Tony poured out her confession in a great rush. "I never realized until I telephoned Ruth this morning what a horrible thing I'd done!" she said.

Larry listened to her at first with bewilderment. "Why, good heavens, it wasn't up to you!"

"To whom, then?" Tony asked bewilderedly. Had someone else—had, by blessed accident—someone else—?

"To me, of course. I had no business to talk about it. It made me feel like a fool, because I'd said to the chief that I wouldn't mention it. But if there's any blame it's up to me."

"Oh, no, it's not," she said, laughing. "What'd you do? Go down to Los Antonios?"

"Flew down. I just got back an hour ago. He sent me up in one of his planes."

"Then's he peaceable?" Tony asked.

"Oh, fine. I think it will all straighten itself out. He's trying to bluff me now, but he won't. I told him that I'd talked about it like a fool, and he's trying to make me believe it makes some difference. But it doesn't a bit."

Tony suddenly began to tell him the whole story about the Porter engagement, and the signed article, and the excitement in the office last night.

"If I'd only gone home, Larry. But I was sort of hanging around Greeny's desk, and suddenly—without thinking it out at all—I said to him, 'Oh, by the way, did you hear about the Journal?' If I'd only thought—"

"It happens all the time," Larry said philosophically. "As for Greeny and the talk with Danielson," he presently added, "that's all newspaper policy. 'Catch 'em young and keep 'em terrified' is the idea. You never feel sure of a newspaper job." He swept some papers on his desk together and looked up.

"Have you had dinner?"

"No." Tony suddenly realized that she was starving, and happier, in her excitement and relief, than she had ever been in her life.

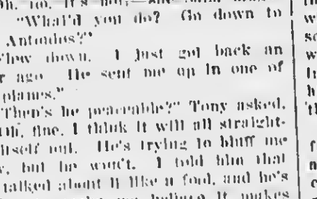
"All right. Let's walk around the corner to Pierre's and have Spanish oysters."

"And fruits Marie Jardin."

"You know Pierre's?"

"No, but you and Ruth were talking about it one night. But where's Ruth?" Tony demanded.

"She and her mother went over in the Piedmont house this afternoon; the tenants go in next week. Well, Tony, this is kind of nice!" Larry said, going with her down the dark stairs.



When your head aches; when Neuralgia tortures you; when Muscular Pains make you miserable—take a Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pill.

Mr. Smith is one of millions who have found this easy way to prompt relief. He says:—

"I keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills in my pocket and when I get a dull heavy feeling in my head, I take a Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pill and the pain passes off."

DR. MILES'
-ANTI-PAIN PILLS-

As she sat opposite him at the little white table, with the smoking oysters between them, and the cheerful simple atmosphere about them scented with Pierre's marvelous salads, Pierre's clear chicory-flavored coffee, Pierre's toasted French bread, her blue eyes shone upon her companion with a liquid sapphire light. They talked of everything, eagerly, joyously, and Tony presently reminded him innocently that this was the very first occasion upon which they two had been alone together.

Afterward they walked to his parked car, and he drove her uptown to the clubhouse, and walked with her to the doorway.

The Very First Occasion Upon Which They Two Had Been Alone Together.

Just at parting she turned to face him. "Larry, you do forgive me? I am bitterly ashamed and very sorry."

"Seriously, if anyone was to blame—and the whole thing will straighten itself, and no harm will be done—it was I."

"Well, you've made me very happy!" Tony went up in the elevator, her heart was singing.

CHAPTER XIII

There came an interval of weeks when life went on smoothly and joyfully; there was less criticism at the office; Tony began again to feel sure of herself and her work. It was glorious to awaken in the summer mornings to a general vague consciousness that all was right, and to lie comfortably abed reflecting upon all the delights that made it so. Tony dawdled through a late breakfast gossiping with her always interested little aunt, glanced at her own paper and the rival papers, pulled her white hat to the right angle, slipped into her loose white coat, ascertained that the yellow scratch paper and the pencil were where they belonged, and went out into the dreaming warm fog of the hilly streets ready for anything that the day might bring.

Sometimes it was a debutantes' affair down the Peninsula; sometimes a wedding. Tony went to the women's clubs for presidents' breakfasts, and ate the chicken patties and hot rolls, listened to the charming speeches and the clapping, and smelled the good scents of roses and delicate perfumes and crisp new silks. She went up and down the steps of the city's handsomest homes; sat in dim great drawing rooms scribbling down names and dates and engagements. Then in July Greenwood sent her down to the Hotel Del Monte to cover the social side of the big golf tournament at Pebble Beach. Tony took Brenda with her for the enchanted week-end, and the sisters wandered through three perfect days of sunshine and gayety and excitement, and went up at night to their high little dormer-windowed bedroom exulting in their particular share of the general festivity.

And it was there that Brenda told Tony very simply that she was going to be married to Alvin Atwater, a doctor in Monterey. "Isn't it a darling name?" Brenda said, lingering on it fondly. No, he had no money and no practice; he had just graduated from medical college, and he wasn't—no, he wasn't handsome.

Tony, even before meeting him, was extraordinarily elated at the news. She had seen the change in her sister; seen Brenda's quicker flushes and heard her softer laughter; she had teased her about some suitor unknown ever since the holidays at Carmel in May. If Brenda liked the long, lean, pale young doctor with the enormous hands and fan ears, then Tony would like him too.

Brenda and Alvin would live in Monterey on nothing. "Except that his father said he would send us five hundred dollars to start in on," said Brenda modestly.

Tony, at Larry's suggestion, had gone to see Ruth shortly after the Journal incident and had frankly confessed to her own stupidity and carelessness in the matter. And Ruth, adamant until the full acknowledgment was made, had instantly softened, as Larry had predicted she would, and had forgiven Tony fully and gladly. So that it was natural for Tony presently, in her own glowing and unhurried way, to tell the Bellamys of her sister's plans.

"He's one of those tall, flaps, paregus-colored men," she said her prospective brother-in-law. "He sticks 'way out of his collar, and he sort

Liquor Industry Girding for Fight

Under the above caption the New York Times of December 15 says:

"Plans for fighting from the ... any attempt by the Anti-Saloon League, Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other dry agencies ... the prohibition ... under ... operation in all division ... liquor industry.

"The National Retail Liquor Package Stores Association ... said to have 25,000 members ... take the matter ... action ... Dec. The organization ... a campaign ... drinking ... state ... the dry ... most active.

"Pointing out that advertisements ... have been erected ... and placed on billboards by ... groups, the association's ... the messages ... part of ... called educational campaign ... a revival of national prohibition ... immediate objective ... local option.'"

This article merely demonstrates the fact that history repeats itself. The temperance work done in the past has to be polished again with greater vigor than ever before.

The modernists are undubitably in the saddle socially and politically just now and they will ride dry sheet over all who come in their path until once again facts and figures awaken the great mass of uninformed who are confused by wet propaganda and are ignorant as to the true situation.

DREAMS COME TRUE

Optimistic dreams over a long period of years by harassed taxpayers of the day when state expenditures would be kept within state revenues seems to have at last been realized. The report of Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald covering the first twelve months of his administration confirms that statement. A deficit of $6,692,304 at the end of the calendar year, 1934, has been changed to a general fund balance on December 31, 1935, of $5,087,707.

Balancing a state budget at a time when so many state budgets have been allowed to go unbalanced is an achievement that has brought per-

HIGHWAYS SNOW-BOUND FIRST TIME THIS WINTER

Snowfall Sunday Drifted by High Wind—All Roads Now Open

Rural mail carriers operating out of the Charlevoix post office failed to make their complete rounds Monday for the first time of the winter season.

Sunday's snowfall whipped by a strong northwest wind, made impassable most country roads. County highway equipment was used to open trunk lines first and was not available for township roads until late Monday afternoon.

All roads under the snow removal program were opened Tuesday.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY HAD BEST CORN CROP

U. S. Department Reports Harvest of ... 90% Merchantable

Charlevoix county had the highest ... corn ... in Northern Michigan this year, according to the Michigan report for December issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the Michigan Department of Agriculture.

Charlevoix had 94 per cent of its crop merchantable. Manistee had 89 per cent, and Grand Traverse was third with 88 per cent. Other counties in the group included Missaukee with 80 per cent, Antrim with 75, Benzie with 67, Emmet with 67, Kalkaska with 65, Leelanau with 68, and Wexford with 76.

In the condition of winter wheat in December, Grand Traverse and Charlevoix were tied with 96 per cent, while Benzie was low with 74.

In the condition of the rye crop in December, Benzie county led with 90 per cent, and Grand Traverse was second with 85 per cent.

DISPOSE OF SLASHINGS, REMOVING FIRE HAZARDS

Charlevoix County Included In District Covered by Project

A $270,000 slash-disposal project, which will put hundreds of men to work in Northern Michigan this winter under direction of the Department of Conservation, has been approved by WPA officials at Washington. Crews will go to work this month.

Slash left in heaps or scattered haphazardly in the wake of timber operations will be systematically burned on thousands of acres of land to lessen the fire hazards to timber stands and heighten the effectiveness of fire suppression.

The project covers all of the counties of the Upper Peninsula and the counties of Antrim, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Cheboygan, Emmet, Charlevoix and the northern part of Grand Traverse county in the Lower Peninsula.

MICHIGAN FARMERS ADOPT ACCOUNTING

Demand for Books Is Result of Request for Historical Records

Orders for new farm account books are pouring into the offices of county agents throughout the state, as more and more Michigan farmers are keeping adequate records of their farm business. A very good farm account book adaptable to any type of farm and to any form of rental agreement can be procured either from the county agents or from the Farm Management Department, M. S. C., according to Herbert A. Berg, farm management extension specialist at Michigan State College.

MICHIGAN PAID LARGE SUM TO QUENCH THIRST

The drinking public of Michigan consumed $22,504,030 worth of hard liquor during 1935, according to final figures for the year announced by Comptroller Edward Stevens of the State Liquor Control Commission.

This is an increase of 54 per cent, or $8,131,363, over sales by state stores during 1934.

"Holiday cheer" sold during December cost $3,508,050 and enabled the commission to chalk up a new high record for a single month's business. December was the first month more than $3,000,000 worth of liquor has been sold. The same month in 1934, the previous peak, sales amounted to $2,679,545.

WOMEN WILL BE INTERESTED IN FARM PROGRAMS

Although the program for Farmers' Week at Michigan State College, February 3 to 7, is set up under a number of divisions, with one expected to be especially interesting to home makers, those in charge of the meetings expect nearly as many women in certain of the agricultural sections as in those sponsored by home makers.

Among the discussions expected to be especially interesting to farm women are those on bees and honey production, poultry and its care, meat cutting, curing, and canning, various phases of dairy production, fruit and vegetable canning, flower culture, and horticulture.

In addition the programs of music, those of the Country Life Association and the Master Farm Home Makers' Association will, no doubt, attract many of the farm women. The home economics division is expecting a full attendance at the meetings devoted to lighting, nutrition, home crafts, table decorations and table service.

The discussions of the present situation and conditions in Ethiopia are expected to hold the attention of the demining visitors. Miss Ross M. Rowe of the Farmers' Wife will be a welcome speaker, as well, also, as Dr. Mary S. Rose, Columbia University.

LAST TRAPPING SEASON CLOSES ON JANUARY 31

The last of the open trapping seasons in Michigan come to a close Friday, January 31, when legal trapping for opossum, foxes and bobcats end for this winter.

Legal hunting of mink, all coons to and January 31 throughout the state. Mink trapping is permitted only during muskrat trapping seasons in the respective areas, which are now closed.

For those who are interested in different characteristics of onions, and the members of the onion family, I shall be very glad to send them to you if you will send your request and a self-addressed stamped envelope to Alice Hale Kent, Chief Dietitian and Home Economics Authority of Michigan Bakeries, Inc.

I have some delicious onion recipes that I'm giving you today. I'm sure you'll find them tasty and also economical:

Creme Onion Soup

4 medium-sized onions, 2 tablespoons shortening, one cup, 2 cups soup stock, 1 cup thin cream or top milk, 1 egg, 6 slices white bread, grated cheese.

Peel and dice onions; fry in shortening until a golden brown. Season well and add to soup stock made by covering soup meat or soup bones with cold salted water and simmering gently three to four hours. Simmer gently for 30 minutes. Add cream or top milk mixed with eggs, slightly beaten. Cook one minute. Pour over toasted bread and serve.

French Onion Soup

6 onions, 3 tablespoons shortening, 1 quart soup stock, 6 slices bread, grated Swiss cheese.

Cut onions into thin slices and cook slowly in fat until tender and slightly browned. Add soup stock made by covering soup meat or soup bones with cold salted water and simmering gently three or four hours. Bring to a boil and boil two or three minutes. Toast bread, place a slice in each soup plate, covering with two tablespoons cheese. Pour the hot soup over toast and serve additional cheese if desired. Serves six.

Baked Bermudas

6 large onions, 3 tablespoons shortening, 4 tablespoons catsup, 1 can baked beans, ½ cup bread crumbs.

Carefully peel onions from stem end. Boil 15 minutes in water to cover. Cut off thick slices from stem ends and carefully remove centers with teaspoon, leaving a thin wall of onion. Fill cavities with one-half cup minced onion, cut from centers, simmered 10 minutes in shortening mixed with catsup, salt and pepper to taste, and beans. Sprinkle tops with bread crumbs; place onions in covered baking dish with little water. Bake at 375 degrees F. about one hour or until onions are tender. Serves six.

Escalloped Onions

5 medium sized onions, 2-3 cup bread crumbs, 1½ teaspoons salt, pepper, 2 tablespoons butter, 2½ cups milk.

Peel and slice onions and potatoes in ¼ inch thick slices. Arrange in alternate layers in well-greased casserole. Sprinkle flour, salt, pepper, dots of butter over each layer. Pour milk over mixture. Bake in 350 degrees F. oven 1½ to 1¾ hours or until the onions and potatoes are tender. Serves six to eight.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Stelter have returned to their home on Belvedere avenue, concluding a vacation of a couple weeks in Florida. Their daughters, Jenn and Jane, who accompanied them, returned to their studies at Olivet College.

Charlevoix residents will be interested in the announcement that Alvah B. Crimmins, former president of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, has been elected vice-president and a director of L. A. Geistert & Co., Grand Rapids investment bankers.

Jack Withers, Charlevoix, is one of the 40 members of the Albion College band, directed by Conway Peters, which begins its annual concert tour with a week of travel in Eastern Michigan, beginning January 13, and concludes with a second week of concerts in March. Withers is a first year student at Albion College and is playing saxophone.

In announcing the recent installation of officers by Baxter Relief Corps, names of the following officers were unintentionally omitted: Chaplain, Mary Prevost; musician, Ethel Hamlin. Delegates chosen to the department convention were May Bugbee, and Olive Christensen as alternate, and those to the district convention were Sadie Prevost, with Mary Prevost as alternate.

CCC enrollees from Camp Mackinac located in the Mackinac State Forest responded to calls at eight forest fires during the 1935 season when the area burned over was the lowest on record, according to the annual report of Chief Foreman Harold Morgerson. A total of 25 acres was burned over, none of it being state-owned land although located within the forest boundaries. Prompt response of the CCC crews to the fire calls is cited as a major reason for the low acreage burned over per fire.

Gwendolyn Miller, of Charlevoix, was among 20 seniors of Michigan State College honored by initiation into Phi Kappa Phi, national honorary scholastic society. Selections for membership were made on the basis of scholastic and all-around excellence. Miss Miller, who is registered in the Music Division of the College, has been selected for several years for the college symphony and women's glee club. She was business manager of the Women's Glee Club in the fall of 1934, made the honor roll of the winter and fall terms of last year, and is a member of Sigma Kappa Sorority.

REPORT CORN LOANS WILL BE CONTINUED

Invalidation of AAA Will Not Affect Credit from RFC Funds

Corn, cotton and other commodity loans, amounting to $269,709,894, made by the Commodity Credit Corporation, were unchanged by invalidation of the AAA, officials have announced.

Although the corporation made loans under objectives to AAA, it was said that existing loans and contracts would not be affected and that future loans could be written without crop reduction requirement.

After a study of the AAA decision, officials believed that the credit corporation could remain in business as usual and not be affected any more than it was by the NRA invalidation.

The corporation is operating under a charter with RFC money, but is a separate organization with a capital stock of $3,000,000.

AMERICAN LEGION ACTIVITIES

Membership has now reached the mark of 87. The post leads the district, and the district leads the state.

The post is planning an Amateur Night to be held at some future date during the winter months, and is calling for volunteer talent (See announcement elsewhere in this paper). Committee in charge is Comrade Elliott Link, chairman, and Comrades Meggison, Bert Taylor, Hamlin, Hanson and Bulow.

A Washington's Birthday masquerade ball is under contemplation and the committee for this affair is Comrade Meggison, chairman, and Comrades Leo Allard and George Hanson. Nothing definite will be decided until the committee reports at the next meeting.

Comrade Meggison reports that a welfare case of absolute destitution, involving a non-veteran, has been given relief by the local welfare offices on the strength of the Legion's recommendation that the case be investigated as a worthy one.

The boys are busily engaged in planning how to spend the bonus. According to the ultra-conservative press, most of it will go for beer. We shall see, however. Payment of debts and taxes, improvement of homes, purchases of clothing, etc., are the objectives stated in the replies to the recent bonus questionnaire sent out from national headquarters.

EDITORIAL

DURING ALL SEASONS

Perhaps you have been annoyed, especially at this time of the year, by repeated appeals to confine your holiday shopping with local merchants. It is true that many of these appeals are based on the selfish motif of the immediate benefits which business men receive with little stress on the good which buying at home achieves throughout the entire year.

If the Boy Scout movement in a community is unusually progressive, it is safe to say it has been given liberal endorsement by Main street. Did you happen to notice the smoke coming out of that factory chimney? Chances are that the notes which your merchants put in the bank to guarantee a bonus is responsible for its location in your midst. You are looking forward to graduating a fine class from high school next June. Taxes promptly paid by mercantile and manufacturing institutions, together with jobs given boys and girls during their junior and senior years, has made it possible for them to take full advantage of exceptional educational facilities.

Notice the lodges, churches, and civic organizations? All of them are the result of liberally filled subscription papers when they were in need of funds. Perhaps there is a selfish motif back of the slogan: "Buy at Home." But we know of no other slogan that pays higger dividends in community satisfaction and progress than the simple admonishment to spend your dollars where they will remain to give constam benefit to all the things which go into full and complete citizenship. Won't do any harm to think it over carefully the next time you feel the urge to journey to some distant point to buy goods and services.

USURIOUS RATES

As long as finance corporations and individuals continue to provide practically all of the small loan markets, complaints about usurious interest rates will be heard. It is difficult to prevent chiselers and racketeers from getting into the personal loan field, to the detriment of those who are conducting an honest business. Recently Prosecuting Attorney McCrea, of Wayne county, warned a number of finance companies in Detroit that all illegal practices in the future would be followed by severe punishment. Some of the companies warned had been in the habit of charging penalties for failing to pay installments on time, ranging from $1 on a five-day default to $5 for a longer period. Finance companies engaged in handling automobile paper are subject to court action should their charges, no matter how disguised, exceed the amount which legally can be exacted, he says. Many state banks, particularly those in the agricultural sections, have been urged by banking officials to equip their banks with an industrial loan department to supply small loan demand in their territory. As a matter of community relief it is said the suggestion is receiving serious consideration by bankers occupying the agrarian field.

MAKING PROGRESS

Under the direction of Prof. James K. Pollock, of the University of Michigan, the task of drafting a civil service law for Michigan is already under way. Nothing will be left to guesswork. Thorough investigation of systems now in use in this and other countries is proposed, so that when the measure is finally completed for presentation to the Legislature it will be hailed as a model for other states to emulate. Equally important is the necessity of an informed public. The citizen who is convinced that civil service means greater government efficiency at less cost is going to see to it that any attempt by politicians to oppose such a law or tamper with it later will have his emphatic disapproval. One way to discourage obstruction would be to pledge support from candidates of both parties in advance. There can be no division by either party if patronage evils are to be ended. It is time that laws designed to ease the burden of taxation were no longer looked upon as controversial matters. In other words no fire was ever extinguished by trying to fiddle and pump a fire engine at the same time.

THE NEW YEAR

The sun is just rising on the morning of another day, the first day of a new year. What can I wish that this day, this year, may bring to me? Nothing that shall make the world or others poorer, nothing at the expense of other men; but just those few things which in their coming do not stop with me, but touch me rather, as they pass and gather strength.

A few friends who understand me, and yet remain my friends. A work to do which has real value without which the world would feel poorer. A return for such work small enough not to tax unduly anyone who pays.

A mind unafraid to travel, even though the trail be not blazed. An understanding heart. A sight of the eternal hills and unresting sea, and of something beautiful the hand of man has made. A sense of humor and the power to laugh. A little leisure with nothing to do. A few moments now quiet, silent meditation. A sense of the presence of God.

And the patience to wait for the coming of these things, with the wisdom to know them when they come. — "A Morning Wish," by W. R. Hunt.

SILK SHIRTS

There is no denying that during the last five years the common man has had a difficult time. But it is impossible of proof that today his lot is very much better than it was when the Roosevelt administration came into power. I remember when a workman was paid $18 a day and scorned to wear a cotton shirt even at his labor. That time will not come again until his employer has work for him to do. WPA pays no such wages. Socialization of industry in Russia has brought neither high wages nor silk shirts to the workers there. He labors for a pittance, spied upon, in constant fear that in an unguarded moment he may draw to himself the attention of the dreaded secret police who are the eyes and ears of the dictator. Regimentation has brought him neither comfort, prosperity, or freedom. Neither will regimentation bring them to the American farmer or the American laborer. Walker B. Edmiston.

YOUTH AND POLITICS

There is so much harping about politics being corrupt that young persons are likely to be led to believe one cannot take an active part in shaping public policies without becoming tainted. Certainly there are high-minded individuals with high purposes in public life. Politics has to do with the science of government, and while it attracts some with purely selfish motives, it draws many others who are sincerely interested in fashioning a better democracy. Some of the best minds in the country have given themselves over to politics — trying to improve, at the same time fortify, the course of government. Young persons are needed in politics, and they should learn to differentiate between the good and bad, and to understand that greatest rewards of popular respect go to those who take the high and noble course. — E. W. Huse in the Wayne (Neb.) Herald

NO NEED FOR HASTE

The demand that Governor Fitzgerald call a special session of the Legislature to enact an unemployment insurance law in conformance with the federal law on that subject, has subsided since the Supreme Court's decision in the AAA case. Before the social security law becomes binding upon the several states it will be necessary to bring it out of the shadow of unconstitutionality. Clearly the social program presents one of the crucial issues of our time; to what extent can the national government use its power to raise money by taxation as a means of legislating over social conditions or regulating the manner in which we lead our daily lives,—local matters over which the Constitution gives it no power to legislate directly? Until every doubt has been removed a special session for this legislation would be, as the Governor says, a waste of time and money.

And Now In Closing—

Much can be done to improve the community life, if there is vision of the opportunities for raising community standards; if there is capable leadership and an effective agency through which to function, and if the community as a whole is interested. It takes right methods, much determination, years of patient effort, and a good deal of teamwork, but it can be done.

Fewer Drivers Mislay Licenses

There are two ways to lose operators' licenses in Michigan just as there are in all other states having operators' license laws. One is to have your license revoked or suspended by order of a court or other competent authority, but the commonest method is merely to mislay it.

With the current public attention on safety, revocation and suspension of licenses are on the increase in Michigan, but it is worthy of noting that the percentage of licensed drivers who lose their licenses by pure absent mindedness or accident, is getting smaller all the time.

During the first 10 months of 1934, when a total of 143,228 applications for operators' licenses were granted, 13,126 persons who had lost their licenses, applied for duplicates to replace their losses. It means that for every 1,000 new applications, 20 applications for duplicate were received. In the first 10 months of 1935, when successful applications for license jumped to 6?,717, an increase of nearly 37 per cent, the number of duplicates issued was only 15,036, which meant that for every 1,000 new licenses, applications for only 24 duplicates were being received.

License applications jumped nearly 37 per cent; applications for duplicate licenses increased only about 20 per cent.

The percentage of chauffeur (including all drivers of commercial motor vehicles) who mislay their licenses, is negligible.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Diphtheria On Increase In Michigan

Recently diphtheria has shown an increase in the state of Michigan, the last five months showing an increase over the same five months of 1934. Is your child among those who are not safe from this dreaded disease? Many mothers and fathers have had their children immunized so they will never take diphtheria, by having the doctor give them toxoid. Since 1930, 2,212 children under five years of age and 5,466 children over five years of age were immunized against diphtheria in District Health Unit No. 3, comprised of the counties of Alcona, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego. The protection was administered by physicians and the District Health Department.

During 1933, an average of 300 children died weekly from diphtheria, in United States and Canada. At least 15 times as many more children suffered from the disease. We can only guess why these children had not been given toxoid. In a few cases, the parents did not believe in such treatment; a few parents did not realize its importance; some could not get to a doctor or clinic; but most of these children were left unprotected because their fathers and mothers just put off having it done.

In 1931, six cases of diphtheria were reported in Charlevoix county; in 1932 one case was reported. For the years 1933, 1934 and 1935 there has not been a single case of diphtheria. Previous to the year 1929 diphtheria had always been present with the peaks in 1922 and 1927 when there were 17 and 12 cases respectively. No deaths were reported caused by diphtheria since 1926 when one death was reported.

One dose toxoid is now available and sufficient for one complete treatment and should be given to all children between the ages of six months and 10 years. Six to nine months of age is the ideal time to immunize children against this dreaded disease and at this age, children respond most easily and show the least reaction. Since most of the deaths caused by diphtheria are among children from two to six, immunity should be established before this time rather than afterward.

Take your children to your doctor or a clinic to ask to have them protected against diphtheria. The District Health Department needs your heartie t cooperation in our "Prevent Diphtheria" campaign in our schools. If your child brings home a request for your approval for the one-dose toxoid treatment, do not hesitate to give your permission. An ounce of prevention is the greatest measure for protection.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your headaches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1981 C. M. Co.

Kidneys Must Clean Out Acids

The only way your body can clean out Acids and poisonous wastes from your blood is thru 9 million tiny, delicate Kidney tubes or filters, but beware of cheap, drastic, irritating drugs. If functional Kidney or Bladder disorders make you suffer from Getting Up Nights, Nervousness, Leg Pains, Backache, Circles Under Eyes, Dizziness, Rheumatic Pains, Acidity, Burning, Smarting or Itching, don't take chances. Get the Doctor's guaranteed prescription called Cystex (Sistex). Works fast, safe and sure. In 48 hours it must bring new vitality, or it is guaranteed to fix you up in one week or money back on return of empty package. Cystex costs only 3c a day at druggists and the guarantee protects you.

LOOK OFF 17 LBS. OF UGLY FAT

HEEDED DOCTOR'S ADVICE

Mrs. Robert Hickey, Roseville, Calif., writes: "My doctor prescribed Kruschen Salts for me—he said they wouldn't hurt me in the least. I've lost 17 lbs. in 6 weeks. Kruschen is worth its weight in gold."

Mrs. Hickey paid no attention to gossipers who said there was no safe way to reduce. She wisely followed her doctor's advice. Why don't YOU?

Get a jar of Kruschen to-day (lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle). Simply take half teaspoonful in cup of hot water every morning. All druggists.

COULD NOT DO HER HOUSEWORK

WHEN everything you attempt is a burden—when you are nervous and irritable—at your wit's end—try this medicine. It may be just what you need for extra energy. Mrs. Charles E. of curves himself around Bendy like an anaconda. He adores her so it makes him perspire when he looks at her!"

"They're to be married—?" Larry asked.

"In September."

* * * * * * *

"Tony," Ruth said, on one of these August days, "why don't you come to Santa Barbara with me?"

"Come—?" The mere thought left Tony's cheeks paler for excitement.

"Why not? You're going to have a week's vacation."

"But I thought you were staying for a month?"

"I am. But you could come back when you liked."

"You're no cripple," Larry contributed. "Anyway," he said in an odd indifferent tone that impressed Tony as puzzling at the moment, "anyway, I come back and forth with the car every weekend. If you and I started at—say, five o'clock on Monday, I'd have you in your office at noon. We'd get some breakfast in San Luis or Paso Robles. I've done it lots of times."

Generously, enthusiastically, Brenda shared with Tony a week later the fun of packing the bag for Santa Barbara. Tony, in a state of indescribable excitement, set the alarm for four o'clock and was dressed and ready when Larry's motor horn gave the signal below. The empty, dirty, shabby street was transfigured with the dawn; the air was chill; there was mystical silence, mystical light abroad. Larry got out of the car to see that she and her suitcase were comfortably bestowed in the back seat. Tony leaned over Ruth's shoulder to give her a kiss; they were away.

The way ran smoothly across quiet, deserted Market street, out past the big hospital whose elevator halls still showed red squares of light, down to the big open highway that was bounded on one side by flat fields hardly touched by real estate signs and small ventures in suburban homes, and on the other by the languid lower waters of the bay. Birds were flapping lazily over the marshes; a train puffed majestically along the embankment, throwing short staccato puffs of steam into the wet morning air.

There was little talk among the three as they rolled contentedly along; it was enough to be alive in the glorious summer dawn and see the sun rise over the great shoulders of the eastern mountains, and send long streamers of warm early gold across the orchards. San Jose, Morgan Hill, Gilroy, all the little valley towns were sound asleep, but when they presently reached Salinas chimneys were smoking and early housewives were astir, and quite suddenly Tony was conscious of a sharp stab of hunger.

"Breakfast here or further down? It's not quite eight," Larry presently said.

"Oh, breakfast here!" the women exclaimed together.

They got out, a little stiff after the more than a hundred chilly miles, followed their man into the clean little bright breakfast room, fell upon sliced figs, smoking hot coffee, brown toast, and fried eggs with the appetites of wolves.

Tony and Ruth took off their coats and stowed them in shipshape fashion before getting back into the car. The sunshine had strengthened into a threat of real heat, now, and the fields and hill ridges between which the road wound were scented with dried tarweed and the rich smell of apples and prunes. Wheat dazzled gold in the light, and the mountains off to the southeast gave off little dazzling spirals of oily hot air. The cattle had climbed to the hill summits to catch whatever little rifts of air might be moving; in one of the arroyos horses had churned a water hole into drying mud.

Presently they turned west and were out on the cliffs above the ocean; for a hundred magic miles the road followed the lip of the sea. Ruth, on the front seat, went to sleep; Larry yawned, smoking one cigarette after another. But Tony watched alertly in insatiable interest and fascination, and was still wide-awake and cheerful when they reached their journey's end, a comfortable hotel cottage in a garden, at four o'clock on a burning afternoon. Ruth preferred a tub bath and a nap, but at five Tony and Larry were in the cool salt breakers, the girl almost mad with delight.

"I tell you that the ocean does something to me!"

"I see it does," Larry shouted back, as a great wave caught them.

Tony found her room small and warm in the last heat of the day, but she herself was made anew, and could unpack and find a book and stretch herself for an hour's idling before dinner with a sense of complete luxury and comfort. Ruth was evidently asleep, for there was no sound from the room next door. From the street came the purr of passing motors, and of the voices of other swimmers coming up cool and rested from the sea. There was a strip of garden just outside her opened French window; roses were glowing there, and the tall spikes of phlox; there were eucalyptus trees; a sprinkler was sending a refreshing wet sound through the warm air.

Dressed in the orange cross-barred organdy, Tony reflected that she might be wearing the least expensive clothes in Santa Barbara tonight, but that that did not mean that she was the least attractive girl. Evidence to the contrary gratified her on all sides, as she walked at Ruth's side across a stretch of blazing garden to the hotel for dinner. And presently there was a young man at their table to make their quartette complete and add to this enchanted night the further enchantment of a new admirer. For he liked her instantly, did Mr. Duncan O'Connor, demanding of her pathetically where she had been all his life, when the music began, rising automatically to dance with her.

"Antoinette—it's a name to dream on," said Duncan O'Connor, dancing. "It's my favorite name. Taft is too long for me to remember; my brain isn't very good. This is my favorite music in the whole world; I mean it. You're what? Larry's niece?"

"No, just a friend. He and I and Ruth have been friends for ever so long. No; I'm the society reporter on the Call."

"I'm on a newspaper here. I half own it."

"Why, how old are you?" Tony looked up at her companion curiously, as they walked back to the table.

"Nine-and-twenty, poppet."

"Have you reached ages already?" Larry asked, pulling out Tony's chair.

"I haven't reached Antoinette's," Duncan said modestly.

"He's got a certain line," Larry warned her. "But don't believe one word he says."

The music recommenced, and this time it was Larry who rose and held open his arms for Tony. Tony rose obediently, but for some reason she found it oddly exciting, thrilling, even frightening to move to the throb of the music over the wide floor with him, his arms about her, and her heart beating so close to his own heart.

"Ruth wouldn't dance?"

"I asked her. She never does."

She was quite breathless when she went back to her salad; afterward she danced with Duncan again, and with a boy that Duncan knew. Then Larry and Ruth said that they were going back to the cottage, and Tony said she would go too; they were all tired. On the way back she said that she meant to get up and swim before breakfast.

"It's a date," said Larry. "I'm playing golf at ten, but I'd love it at eight. And we can breakfast afterward."

"I'm playing bridge," Ruth said. "Alice telephoned about it. I don't believe I'll get up early and swim. Tomorrow's going to be a scorcher."

"You can amuse yourself somehow tomorrow, Tony?"

"Amuse myself! I could amuse myself here for a thousand years!"

"You make this dull old place seem fun!" Larry said.

CHAPTER XIV

The week flew by; it was unlike any other time Tony had ever known. The hours seemed dreamlike, unreal, shot with unearthly sunshine, perfumed with flowers that were sweeter than other flowers, set to the deep organ-toned voice of the tireless green ocean into which she flung herself shouting with joy every morning and every afternoon. Cool and sweet in fresh linen, she went with Ruth to afternoon readings, to one or two teas; she became a familiar figure at the Beach club; her blue bathing suit dried on the line, her blue eyes dancing over the lunch room with their appetite for joy and adventure never quenched.

Larry came down on Friday night; Saturday, Sunday flashed by, the holiday was over. Again the linens and organdies were packed, and again the alarm was set.

Duncan O'Connor had come up to the cottage to say good-bye a few hours earlier, in the twilight, and she had walked with him in the garden for a few minutes, and let him kiss her. Somehow it didn't seem important, but it all fitted into the dream of youth and joy and beauty and autumn beside the sea. She was not in love with noisy handsome Duncan, but she liked having him think himself in love with her.

Ruth was not awake when she and Larry crept from the house the following morning in the soft dawn; dew was heavy on the garden, and a blanket of fog shut off the sea. Tony felt strangely sad; the dripping awnings and beaded spears of grass seemed melancholy to her. Almost in silence she established herself in the front seat beside Larry; he threw her a rug to wrap about her knees, and she was glad of its warmth.

"Next stop for breakfast!" Larry announced, turning up his coat collar, pulling on his driving gloves.

"And my party is over!" the girl mourned. The burned brown hills, the veiled ocean, slipped by; reluctantly the sun pierced the land fog and drove it away, and Tony saw the flashing light of the new day reflected blazingly in the windows of the sleeping little houses along the road.

Breakfast at Santa Maria, and more miles and miles and miles clicked off on the meter. She and Larry talked; presently he told her that it seemed to him the shortest run he had ever made from Santa Barbara.

Then, only a few miles out of the city, suddenly on the left there was the looming shadow of a truck thundering out of a crossroad, and the veering of the big car that was coming swiftly toward them. Their own car, reeling dizzily, was driven off into the soft shoulder of the highway, slipping, slipping, wrenched desperately by Larry's hands back toward the line—slipping in spite of it—and the steep hill and the bay just below—

Tony gasped; heard him say sharply, "Keep quiet, we're all right!" before there was a second of sickening horror, and the alternation of flying white sky and brown grass past the window, and the rending and smashing of wood. Then an awful silence, and a gentle little tinkle of glass.

She was struggling with a door above her head; she was out on the grass, her hand to help him. Larry was beside her. Tony looked up a steep hillside at a fringe of cars and spectators against the sky above; looked down at the crawling gray level of water. She felt physically sick; tottered dizzily on her feet; was suddenly safe and tight against Larry's heart.

"Tony, my darling, my darling—you're all right?"

She shut her eyes, rested her head weakly against Larry's shoulder. Immediately two or three officers were beside them, were talking, were helping her up the hill. From somewhere a taxi appeared, and Tony was bundled into it and found herself alone with Larry again, speeding toward the city.

He kept his arm tightly about her, and she rested her head against him; they did not speak for a long while.

"Home, huh, Tony?"

"I—I think so."

"You were a brick; a perfect brick. I never saw him at all! What did you do, open the door?"

"I don't remember; I must have. I saw you—all tumbled over the wheel."

There Was a Second of Sickening Horror.

She shut her eyes. "I had the feeling of death—death close, and—and inevitable!"

"You were a brick," he said again.

When they reached the dingy Fulton street doorway he went up with her to the shabby little apartment on the top floor; it was the first time he had seen it. Aunt Meggy and Aunt Sally were there; Tony shakily introduced Larry and gave them no idea of what had occurred.

Somewhat more favorable consumer prices are noticeable in forequarter cuts of lamb, fresh pork, eggs and butter. Vegetables in general are fairly plentiful and moderate in price, the outstanding exception being string beans.

Greens including spinach are perhaps the cheapest. Green peas and lima beans are moderate in price and cauliflower is again fairly plentiful.

Iceberg lettuce continues to be an outstanding bargain. Tomatoes are cheaper.

Strawberries are becoming more plentiful but the outstanding fruits continue to be the citrus varieties, apples and bananas.

COUNTY WILL SEEK MORE ROAD MONEY

SENT DELEGATION TO LANSING CONFERENCE

United With All Upper Michigan Counties In Effort to Get More Funds for Snow Removal

Charlevoix county was represented in the delegation that went to Lansing, Tuesday, January 14, to confer with the State Administrative Board to secure an emergency appropriation of funds to finance snow removal in the Northern Michigan counties.

According to Carl F. Winkler, Houghton county highway engineer and president of the Upper Peninsula Road Builders' Association, the sum of $600,000 will be asked as supplementary aid to compensate the northern counties for the climatic conditions that cause them higher maintenance costs. The Northern Michigan Road Commissioners' Association, of which Ross Jackson, of Gaylord, is president, is associated with the Upper Peninsula organization in the snow removal movement to obtain funds to keep rural roads open during the winter.

Failed In Legislature

Under the McNitt Act, the counties have been taking over township roads on a five-year program, but it is claimed that funds allocated from the gasoline tax are insufficient to compensate the counties for the increased financial burden. Aggravating the problem also is the inability of the counties to raise money for road purposes locally due to the 15-mill tax limitation amendment.

During the last session of the Legislature, Senator John Wheaton, of Nov [illegible] introduced a bill asking an appropriation of $250,000 for county road [illegible] in the Upper Peninsula, but no measure failed of passage by that body.

Charlevoix County Situation

It may not be altogether clear to everyone just why so many counties find themselves in an embarrassing financial condition, making it impossible to proceed with a satisfactory snow removal program. An examination of the record covering a period of years will leave no doubt that the county road boards have been in a cross-fire of decreasing income and increasing responsibility.

Taking Charlevoix county, for example, it can be shown that the average annual income for the six-year period, 1926-1931, inclusive, for county road purposes was $66,802.15 of which amount $38,896.21 was a local property tax. During the same time the townships raised by property tax for use on township roads, an annual average sum of $24,303.33 making a total of $63,172.54 spent annually on the county and township roads. Of this total expenditure little, if any, was spent for snow removal.

What the picture today? The Charlevoix County Road Commission is not only responsible for all the roads it had during the aforementioned period, but has taken over, or will take over by next April, all the township roads, increasing the county road mileage from 122.1 to 703.35 miles.

Income during the past five years decreased, and for 1935 to date Charlevoix county has received from weight and gas tax $21,215.91 with the county's share of same for third and fourth quarter still due and estimated at approximately $6,000, which, together with the McNitt money, amounting to $12,380.86, which is for maintenance of former township roads, makes a total of approximately $59,726.76. Compare these figures with the total average income of $66,802.15 for the 1926-1931 period, of which $24,303.33 was spent yearly on township roads, and also consider the increased demand for better highway service, which for snow removal alone is nine times greater than five years ago, and the reason for the present county highway financial dilemma is not apparent.

No Local Taxes Levied

Losses in revenue are accounted for by the fact that by the passage of the McNitt law the townships can not levy the road tax, a loss of which is revenue of $24,303.33 per year. With adoption of the 15 mill tax limitation amendment, the board of supervisors could no longer raise a county road tax, another annual loss of $38,869.21. The Legislature reduced the automobile weight tax from 55 cents to 35 cents, with approximately one-half the loss coming out of the county revenue.

To replace these losses, Charlevoix county has received what is known as the McNitt money which, during the past four years, has averaged a little over $25,000 per year which, with approximately $27,932 weight and gas tax, makes an average of approximately $52,932 as against an average of $63,172.54 raised previous to taking over township roads by the county.

TELL 'WHAT IT TAKES' TO BE WINTER QUEEN

Poise, Personality, Voice Are Factors In Petoskey Competition

Poise, personality, voice and appearance are the four points upon which election of Petoskey's Winter Queen will be based in the final contest to be held at the Temple Theater in Petoskey on the night of Tuesday, January 21.

These instructions from the Petoskey winter sports committee concern the Charlevoix representative's activities. She must report at the Perry Hotel in Petoskey on the afternoon of the contest clad in her snow suit and ready for pictures. That evening she will be guest at the dinner for candidates and must wear the formal gown in which she will appear on the stage in the contest. On her first trip across the stage she will be asked about her favorite winter sport and on her second appearance will be asked other questions.

LARGER PIG CROP IS EXPECTED THIS YEAR

Michigan Producers Substantially Increase Fall Production

More little pigs will go to market in Michigan this year, it is forecast in the December survey released by the cooperative crop reporting service maintained by the state and federal agricultural departments.

Hog producers of the state substantially increased their 1935 fall pig crop over that for the last half of 1934, the report shows. The pig crop for last year has been estimated at 356,000 head, or 31 per cent more than the 265,000 head farrowed from June to December, 1934.

The number of sows expected to farrow during the spring of 1936 is indicated at 73,000, or an increase of 40 per cent over the 52,000 head that farrowed in the spring of 1935.

CHARLEVOIX WINS PAIR BALL GAMES

TOPPLED TWO CLASS B TEAMS HERE LAST WEEK

Defeat Traverse City 26 to 19, Alpena 24 to 16; Play Mancelona Here Friday Night

Playing in the best form shown this season, Charlevoix's Red Rayders upset the old dope bucket twice last week to topple over a pair of Northern Michigan's best Class B outfits. Traverse City and Alpena were the victims, the former by a 26 to 19 count, and the latter by a 24 to 16 score.

Traverse Till Rough

Charlevoix evened the season's count with the Traverse Trojans in a rough contest last Wednesday night, staging a typical late rally to win. Traverse led 6 and 5 at the quarter, and the same margin was reversed in Charlevoix's favor as the Rayders were out in front 9 and 8 at the half.

The Rayders maintained their advantage in the third stanza, scoring seven points to the visitors' four for a 16 to 12 lead. Traverse lost Straub and Kelsch on personals late in this period. With the pace still fast, the Rayders outscored their opponent 10 to 7 in the last period.

Rally to Beat Alpena

The Rayders rallied in no uncertain manner to snatch victory from Alpena Friday night. They had trailed since the opening whistle and appeared to be up against the better team when a fourth quarter spurt netted five field goals and a 24 to 16 victory.

Charlevoix scored but twice in the first half, one field goal and two shots from the foul line. Alpena had counted three goals and as many free shots. The Rayders pulled up to within two points of the visitors in the third frame, scoring five goals to four for Alpena.

The fireworks let loose in the final period. Scott evened the count and Pearl's deuce put Charlevoix ahead. Pearl found the meshes twice more and Gallagher and Schwab each accounted for a goal before the period ended. The contest was fast and clean.

Beacons Along the Route

FUR TRAPPERS HAVE A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Catches Reported Larger and Return Greater During Past Season

Due in part to the increased rainfall and the improvement of business conditions of 1935, Michigan fur trappers had a "boom" season during the past fall and early winter trapping periods.

Michigan fur dealers are reporting an increased value of pelts, a marked improvement in their quality and a general increase in price. Through this combination of circumstances, Michigan trappers realized a far greater revenue for their efforts than during the year 1934-1935.

The compilation of fur dealers' reports for that year indicates that the fur industry in Michigan approximates the $1,000,000 mark each year under average conditions.

PRESIDENT'S BALL FOR WORTHY CAUSE

FOR NATIONAL FIGHT ON INFANTILE PARALYSIS

This Community Retains 70% Proceeds from Third Annual Affair to Be Held at The Argonne

Charlevoix will stage another President's Birthday Ball at The Argonne on Thursday evening, January 30.

Like its predecessors, this third annual event is concerned primarily with raising funds to fight infantile paralysis in this country. President Roosevelt, whose birthday is the occasion of this tremendous gathering, has taken the leadership in this fight against infantile paralysis.

Last year and year before something more than a million dollars was raised at each of the previous birthday celebrations for this cause. Seventy per cent of the money was retained in the communities in which it was raised to support local hospitals in care and research. The remainder went to the Warm Springs Foundation, center of the organized attempt to overcome infantile paralysis.

Charlevoix's celebration this year at The Argonne will provide entertainment, dancing and a chicken dinner for those who attend and aid in this worthy effort.

EFFORT TO OBTAIN SNOW FUNDS FAILS

OFFER TO ADVANCE WEIGHT TAX UNSATISFACTORY

Question of Using Part of Sales Tax for Snow Removal Will Be Taken Before the Legislature

Indications today point to the probability that the question of using state funds for local snow removal purposes will be an issue in the next session of the Legislature.

The issue was initiated last week when a delegation representing the 15 counties of the Upper Peninsula and 34 counties in the northern part of the Lower Peninsula made an unsuccessful appeal for an emergency appropriation of $600,000 to remove snow off non-trunkline highways. Of this amount, $250,000 was asked by the Upper Peninsula.

In laying its appeal before the highway committee of the State Administrative Board, the delegation suggested that a portion of the sales tax levied on gasoline sales be used to solve the snow removal problem. The delegation claimed that the allocations of northern counties from the $4,000,000 McNitt Law fund is insufficient to meet additional maintenance burdens and snow removal costs involved in the absorption of township roads by the counties. The delegation specifically opposed any further drain on state highway revenues to meet the issue.

Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner, endorsed the principle of using the gasoline sales tax revenue for snow removal although he pointed out legislation would be required for this reform. He said that sales tax revenues not only from gasoline but all highway equipment and accessories including automobiles should be used for road purposes.

"There is a national trend to use highway revenues for highway purposes," the commissioner said. "You may expect that the State Highway Department will have some recommendations to make along this line at the next session of the Legislature."

In an effort to meet the present emergency, the state offered to advance $2,000,000 of weight tax money regularly due in April. This proposal, it is understood, did not meet the approval of the Charlevoix county road commission in view of the fact these funds will be needed for maintenance of county roads during the spring and summer, and that it would be poor business to plow roads on borrowed money which would be needed later.

It is probable the county will continue its road plowing operations to an extent permitted by funds available. It has been pointed out that it is useless to plow a road at all unless it can be done regularly and, with this fact in mind, the commission has attempted to outline a snow removal program within its financial means.

The condition of the poor is the worst that it has been in the three years of the present administration, it is reported. LET'S MEASURE UP STRAIGHT on your winter gasoline

If you work your starter only eight or ten times a day, from now till March 21st, that will be 500 to 700 starts altogether. Let's say you only cut your time in half—one start, using Winter Blend Conoco Bronze gasoline. Even so, that's spending or saving your battery 250 starts before next Spring!

Right there Conoco Bronze might easily save you the price of a battery, or the fuss and expense of re-charging. Besides, you choke less, with Conoco Bronze, so you will not waste gasoline, or risk the life of your engine. And neither will your oil get so thin that you change it too often—another good saving.

Now Conoco Bronze costs you only the same as a gasoline you might buy for no special reason at all. Then isn't this a fair request: test a tankful of sure-start Conoco Bronze. Continental Oil Company, Established 1875

It was one o'clock. Tony washed her pale dirty face and treated the little cut on her forehead. Before they went away she showed Larry her father's photograph and her mother's, and the view that lay below the sitting-room windows. Then he took her downtown, and they had delicious soup and a thick steak and coffee.

She was still pale; too much excited to eat very much. But the hot drink brought back her color, and when Larry left her at the office door she looked more like herself.

"I'm not going to say anything about this to Ruth, Tony."

"The car will probably be in shape by the end of the week, and if it isn't, I'll just wire her that I'm coming down by train; I often do, Tony," said Larry, looking down at her from his great height, in parting, and smiling his kindly smile, "it was kind of nice to see your home."

"You're going to have a black-and-blue mark on your cheek."

"I suppose so. It feels sore. You may be more shaken up yourself than you realize," Larry said. "I'll telephone tonight and see how you feel. What time do you get home tonight?"

"Monday? Oh, for dinner. Around six somewhere. Bendy and Cliff are dining with her young man's father at the Palace, and Brece's away; he's [illegible] ranch all summer, you know."

"I [illegible] business dinner, worse luck [illegible] id, or I'd invite myself up."

She smiled in sheer surprise and pleasure.

"Oh, wouldn't that be fun! I never—I was going to say I never thought of asking you," Tony said artlessly. "But we'd love it, some night, if you'd come!"

"I will come. And I'll never try to kill you again."

"Good-by, Tony."

"Good-by."

Tony turned into the Call building; went upstairs. She reported duly to Greenwood's desk; he was not there. Telephone, typewriter, telephone again; Tony compiled her daily social column in the usual way. Mollie Mackay came in and observed, in a stream of odd gossip, that the Journal and the Examiner dent might go through, after all; she had heard that four big offices on the floor above the Examiner's regular rooms were to be turned over to Lawrence Bellamy.

Tony had told some of the men of the office of the morning's close escape from death; she felt languidly unwilling to reopen the whole story with Mollie. Somehow it suffocated her to talk today.

Mae Ethyl Muzzy was being pathetic and feminine and helpless under the gallant tutelage of Arch Slosser. Mae was the most recent addition to the staff; Tony fancied that she would not last long. She had appeared a week or two earlier, the blondest blonde ever seen outside of a doll shop. She was to do "feature" stories. Her only interest was in the men with whom she found herself surrounded. Some of these [illegible] at once; the others ignored her; there seemed to be no middle course with Mae.

Spike Ilyan came over to Tony's desk. "Say, did they tell you about Bess Cutler, while you were gone?"

"No, what happened?"

"Oh, she came in here and she took Frank Fitch for a free ride, let me tell you! She raged around the office, and she appealed to Greeny, and she just generally raised hell! Well, what's she expect? From the beginning Fitch has been a pattern of purity. Probably she hasn't got a letter or a check. What she got from him she got in cash!"

"Ugh!" Tony said violently. After Spike went away she sat staring vaguely into space for a while, not thinking, not reasoning, her senses swept vaguely back and forth on waves of strange new emotion.

"Better go home and get to bed," Greeny said, at her desk. "It's nearly five; you've had quite a shake-up."

"I think I will. My stuff's all done. I can round up that runners story tomorrow; I've got to see the health bureau about it, anyway. You're sure you've not got anything you want me to cover tonight?".

"We had a swell story while you were gone; girl picked up by the police in boy's clothes, said her father spanked her. See it?"

"They were telling me about it. Mae Muzzy wrote it."

"She did not. I wish you could see what she turned in! I had to send Van down to get the stuff after she'd been all day on it and the Bulletin came out with it before we did!"

He had glanced at the layout on [illegible] Miss Muzzy who was in spite of babyish touches over the heads of the tycoon size and was [illegible] adored by Arch Slosser and [illegible] and also real significant eye [illegible]

"[illegible]" Tony ejaculated, in honest admiration and incredulity. Green stood whistling, his tongue in his cheek, gobbled.

"I think that—is dangerous," Tony said slowly, preparing to rise. She found herself a little stiff, when she got to her feet, and her head felt slightly dizzy. Just as she was ready to go her telephone bell tinkled.

The languid weary world came suddenly to life; colors, perfumes, music were singing suddenly together in her head.

"Oh, yes Larry—" she said breathlessly.

"How'd you feel?"

The big voice seemed to penetrate to the very depths of her being; everything was all right again.

"I'm fine. But I feel a little tired."

"How soon are you going home?"

"Now."

"I'm tied up with your friend Mr Arnoldson, or I'd come take you home. I'll call you some time tomorrow. You're really all right?"

"Yes, but I've been sort of stupid, vague."

"Me too. Well, I'll call you tomorrow."

"Good-by, Larry." Tony left the office in a dream, and in a dream boarded a street car. She went into the apartment feeling broken in body and soul; stretched herself on the sitting-room couch and lay with her eyes closed, too tired to speak or move or even to think.

The familiar scene held her like comforting arms. The dinner table was set for two; there had been a wood fire, and the ashes of it were still glowing. Mother's picture, Dad's picture, the old books and pictures and vases; the old shabby chairs and the winged table were all a part of home; it was as if Tony felt her entire, her personality restored by them.

In her ears there echoed only one sound; the sound of a man's voice—a man's words.

"Tony, my darling, my darling—"

Brenda came in from the kitchen with a cup of hot soup.

"Stay right where you are and drink this."

Tony jerked herself up to something nearer a sitting position.

"I thought you and Cliff were going to dine with Mr. Atwater?"

"I am. I'm all dressed but my dress."

The home routine went on. "He's at the club, he's at the club—" Tony's thoughts ran. "What excuse have I for calling him there? I could telephone and say—I could say—what on earth could I say?"

Her skin felt dry, and her heart was beating irregularly. She went into her room, got out of office clothes. A feverish restlessness was upon her; she must hear Larry's voice.

The telephone again; Tony had the receiver pressed to her ear before the bell fairly stopped ringing. It was Barney Kerr; the world went dark and dull. Tony slumped in her chair.

"Cliff said you'd had a bad smash this morning." Then the whole tiresome story to go over again.

"Listen, if I come up, could I see you for a few minutes?"

"Come up to dinner," Tony said languidly. "But it's just Aunt Meg and me, and we're not having anything exciting."

• • • • • •

Barney sat opposite her as she lay stretched on the couch. "It's made me realize how much I think of you, Tony."

She opened tired eyes, dark in her pale face.

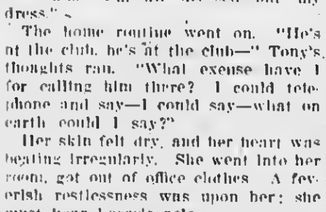
"I rather thought you did realize that."

"Ah, well," Barney said, in a voice that was faintly reproachful "you know how I feel."

Tony was silent. After a while he added, lightly yet determinedly:

"Some day you're going to be real nice to me, you know, Tony."

"Well—" she said, not hearing his words, hearing only something wearisome and distracting. If he would stop talking, in that manly, kind, superior voice—



[illegible] you

-Dr. Miles Pain Pills-

"Did it make you feel faint?"

"Giddy, for a minute." Against her inner vision she saw again Larry's brown coat and its comforting shoulder; white sky and brown grass, gray crawling sea; she heard that voice crying out to her: "Tony, my darling, my darling—"

She came back to her senses, and to the quiet living room.

"There's the telephone. Shall I answer it?" said Barney.

"If you would. It's probably for Cliff."

Barney spoke next from the hall. "She says she didn't ring."

"Oh, then it's the door bell. They sound alike at night, we don't know why. See who it is, will you?"

The room turned over; settled; Tony felt her heart begin to pump steadily, heavily; she raised her blue eyes to the door. It was Larry Bellamy's voice in the hall. His step. His smile looking down at her.

"Well—all knocked out, eh? Since I found my way here today, tonight on my way home I thought I'd look in and see how it was going."

Tony, not rising, stretched up a brown hand. There were introductions. Then Larry sat down beside the fire and Barney took the other chair, and the couch completed the fireside circle.

"Tony's told you we had a nasty spill this morning?"

"It was a close call."

"The meanest I ever had. I blame myself. We were going at a pretty good clip."

"We weren't going over forty-five, I should think," Tony offered.

The two men talked together. There was but one lighted lamp in the room, but the fire blazed up bravely. Tony lay looking from one speaker to the other; she had little to say. She saw the light dancing on the backs of books, and on the jumble of treasures that made the room home. Her eyes roved past the dull soft blues and browns of the Madras curtains to the mantelpiece, with the old clock, and more family pictures. And always her look came back to the brown earnest face of the man who was sitting there talking to Barney. Aristocratic and forceful that was Larry's face; Tony felt that she could watch it forever and never tire of its moulding, its expressions suddenly amused or suddenly serious, its kindly smile.

Brenda and Alvin and Cliff came in while they were talking, and they made the circle bigger. Brenda was delighted to present Alvin; in the soft lamplight and firelight they all talked together, all the young faces turning toward Larry's respectfully. They knew, Tony thought, they sensed that Larry was important, was the leader—the conspicuous figure in any group in which he found himself. He held them together, and kept the talk in line, and made them all feel happy; amusing and amused. Cliff's deep laugh rang out, and Barney grew animated and argumentative; presently Tony heard her aunt's little dry double cough behind the closed bedroom door and held up a warning hand.

"Yes, I heard it, too," Brenda murmured. "My aunt," she explained; "we're keeping her awake." Larry and Barney at once got up to go. "By the way," Larry said, in parting, "here's a lot of news that you can quote as much as you like."

"Oh, don't!" Tony begged flushing.

"The papers are all going to have it, so don't worry," Larry said. "I am now the business and financial editor of the Call."

"Of the Call!"

"Yes'm. I had dinner with Arnoldson tonight. We threshed it all out, he had his lawyer there, and I had mine, and we're signed up. I sent Ruth a long wire."

"We thought it was the Examiner," Brenda told him, with her eyes shining.

"No, we couldn't come to terms."

"Thanks to me," Tony said, suddenly scarlet. Larry looked at her speculatively.

"Well, maybe. But anyhow, this is a much better thing for me. I'm to be an associate editor, and confer with Arnoldson about pretty nearly everything. So, mademoiselle, I'll be seeing you in the city room one of these days."

"Good-night, boss!" Tony said meekly.

Cliff walked down to the street with them; Brenda and Tony had hardly heard the closing of the hall door when they began hastily putting the sitting room to rights, making up Cliff's bed on the couch, opening windows.

"Tony, are you dead? You've had a terrific day. Starting from Santa Barbara this morning in the dark—"

"No-o-o," Tony said, in a voice through which bells rang. "I feel perfectly wonderful!"

CHAPTER XV

The next day there was confusion and excitement in the office; nobody could talk of anything but the change, and Tony received due respect as a close friend of the new associate editor.

"Is he nice?"

"Mr. Bellamy? He's charming."

"They say Danielson's frantic."

"Fitch doesn't look any too 'gay.'"

Mr. Fitch, whatever his feelings, was not in evidence, but Bess Cutler was. Fat and soft and pathetic, with a lace hat and much too much rouge accentuating the wrinkled hagginess of her face and the false gold of her hair, she went from desk to desk, trying to seem a part of the city room again.

"Did—did Frank say anything about my doing some work for him next month, Tony?" she presently asked.

"No, he didn't, Bess. He may have to Greeny."

"I was going up to Tahoe. But now

ROBERT GORDON ONE OF 3 STRANDED FISHERMEN

Marooned on Tahquamenon Island In Whitefish Bay Since January 16

Due to the fact one of their number is a former local commercial fisherman, Charlevoix residents are watching with interest the progress of attempts to rescue Robert Gordon, of Brimley, and Edgar Ladd and Orville Brown, of Emerson, who are stranded on Tahquamenon Island, four miles from the mainland in Whitefish Bay.

Plight of the trio was discovered January 16. Their boat is trapped near the island by lush ice. Food had since been dropped to them twice by airplane and report Tuesday gave the information the trio refused to leave their boat after Coast Guards had crossed the ice flows from the mainland to reach them.

The owner of the tug, Robert Gordon, formerly operated a commercial fishing rig out of Charlevoix and St. James.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

Drivers' License Sale Stimulated

Most automobile drivers of the state require only a personal reminder that their operators' licenses may have expired, to cause them to investigate and apply for one if necessary.

This is the inescapable conclusion reached by officials of the Department of State as the result of the flow of applications for these licenses during the past two months. Late in 1935, it became publicly known that application blanks for 1936 automobile licenses would contain two questions: one asking the number of the applicant's operator's license; the other, the date of expiration.

The thousands of plate applications flowing across the counters of the department in the capitol and at branch offices throughout the state, furnish the explanation for the recent increase in applications for operators' licenses. Hundreds of applicants for plates give a date late in 1938 as the expiration of their operator's licenses, showing that they secured them when they realized they would be asked questions about them as they purchased their 1936 plates.

While there are still thousands of operators whose licenses have expired, the fact remains that more than 1,000 applications are being received every day, this rate having been averaged for the past two months, with some 10,000 in December, 1935, alone. Chauffeurs' licenses took a giant stride, more than 35,000 being issued in those two months, as compared with some 13,000 for the corresponding months a year ago.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

O. F. Walker, Mancelona, New District Club Agent

Orville F. Walker, former teacher in the Alba and Mancelona High schools, has been appointed by the State Board of Agriculture as the District Club Agent. He will be in charge of the boys' and girls' 4-H Club program in this district, comprising the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan. One week's time out of each month will be spent in each of the four counties.

Mr. Walker comes to us well equipped and with the proper background to hend up this important phase of extension activity. At Alba where he taught for six years, he was in the center of Michigan certified seed potato area and has been a successful potato raiser on his own farm. During all of these years he has been deeply interested in 4-H Club activity and has been one of the outstanding club leaders in the state. As a result of his leadership, several of his boys have won trips to Chicago in addition to many to the State Fair at Detroit.

Last week Mr. Walker and your local agent visited practically all of the clubs in the county and became acquainted with the local set-up. He is very enthusiastic over the organization in the county and will assist in every way possible to make a success of the program. In fact, there are more members enrolled in the club work this winter than in any other similar period and it is felt that with this additional help available and many supplementary activities can be associated with the regular requirements, all of which greatly add to the success of the program.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Infants Require the Right Kind of Environment

The problems that perplex young mothers and that are discussed by Mrs. Oettinger in the Hygiea are as follows:

Before baby is born, plan to make the home he enters the best possible. If you wait, you may become so busy taking care of his everyday needs that you will forget how important attitudes are.

1. If parents smother the baby with too much affection.
2. If either parent becomes so absorbed in the baby that the other is forgotten.
3. If the lady's coming is resented and nobody is happy about it.
4. If the mother is using the baby's coming to make her husband and family knit on her.
5. If the baby's brothers and sisters are not ready to greet him.
6. If the parents are ready to welcome only a boy or only a girl.
7. If either parent is always looking for and worrying about bad traits which baby may inherit from parents or other relatives.
8. If the mother's strength is sapped by fears about her physical condition.

To close her article Mrs. Oettinger says, "Do not feel alarmed if you find after reading this that you are not the perfect mother and father. The average home makes some of the mistakes some of the time. It is easier to steer toward better and more modern ideas if they are brought together for you to think about, now that you are undertaking this most important work in the world — the care and training of a new individual."

Between 12,000 and 15,000 gun permits are issued each year in Michigan. Applications for permits must be made to local Conservation officers; not to Lansing.

Second Lesson In Child Care Project On January 30

—The second lesson in the project Child Care and Development will be given Thursday, January 30, in the East Jordan community rooms. Mrs. Lydia Ann Lynde, specialist in Child Care and Training from the Michigan State College, will again be in charge. The subject to be discussed is Self-reliance. This will be a study of decreasing control, of devising methods of training in making decisions and of training in the use of money.

At the present time there are seven different communities in the county who have organized this project. Each community has selected either one or two leaders who attend the county-wide training center, then give this lesson in their own community. At the present time the following communities are carrying on this project: Ironton, Marion Center, South Arm, Deer Lake, Boyne City (one group) and East Jordan (two groups). After the next meeting a list of the leaders carrying on the program will be announced.

Forestry Work to Be Organized Next Week

P. W. Robbins, research extension forester, will visit Charlevoix county on January 27 and 28 for the purpose of establishing two or three wood lot thinning demonstrations, and to discuss the organization of a 4-H Club station at Boyne Falls. Recently the Boyne Falls Consolidated Schools purchased a tract of timber located just west of Boyne Falls to more or less carry on forestry projects.

It is hoped that a group of boys will organize themselves into a forestry club. It is highly probable that next spring the first step will be to set out several thousand trees. During the second year of their activity they will interest themselves in wood lot thinning and tree maintenance. Year by year as they continue their 4-H Club work, they will gradually carry on wood lot management practices.

This will be the first time that a forestry club has been organized and considerable interest has already been manifested. Charlevoix county should be more conscious of its timber resources. There are many valuable tracts of timber that should be thinned and properly managed, all of which will mean many additional dollars added to farm incomes in the future. As this program develops, demonstrations will be held to acquaint wood lot owners of the advantages of taking better care of wood lots.

ROCK ELM

Several from this district are enjoying the fishing season, having their fish houses on South Arm of the lake.

The Grange held its regular meeting Thursday afternoon with 14 members present. A short program was rendered. It was voted unanimously to have an oyster dinner for the next meeting.

A number of boys and girls met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Jensen, Friday night, and enjoyed a guessing party with Ernest Mather. Before returning to their homes they were treated to pop corn and candy.

LAX THE BLADDER
USE JUNIPER OIL, BUCHU, ETC.
Make this 25c test. If irritation wakes you up, causes burning, scanty flow, frequent desire or backache, flush out the excess acids and waste matter. Get juniper oil, buchu leaves, etc., in green tablets called Bukets, the bladder lax. Works on the bladder similar to castor oil on the bowels. After four days if not satisfied any druggist will refund your 25c. F. J. Fessenden, Druggist.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go
The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.
Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS
By Ann Page

Apples are the big news in this week's markets—cooking, eating and all-purpose apples are being featured at attractive prices. Fresh pork is cheaper and beef and lamb as well. Fresh eggs are now plentiful, and even the top grades are reasonable. Last week's lower price of butter has been maintained due to increasing production.

Many vegetables are in market—most of them fairly inexpensive. Worthy of special mention are broccoli, spinach, beets, peas and cabbage. Iceberg lettuce continues to be an excellent value.

Florida oranges, navel oranges, Temple oranges, tangerines, grapefruit and bananas are the outstanding fruits with the big exception of apples.

Here are three menus at different budget levels for Sunday dinner.

Low Cost Dinner
Pan-broiled Ground Beef
Baked Potatoes — Creamed Parsnips
Bread and Butter
Dutch Apple Cake
Tea or Coffee — Milk

Medium Cost Dinner
Roast Pork — Apple Sauce
Sweet Potatoes — Buttered Cauliflower
Bread and Butter
Floating Island
Tea or Coffee — Milk

Very Special Dinner
Grapefruit
Broiled Sirloin Steak
Scalloped Potatoes — Buttered Broccoli
Lettuce — Russian Dressing
Rolls and Butter
Deep Apple Pie — Cheese
Coffee

Lapses of temper are signs of senility.

CHAPTER XV

I'm not, and I'd love time for sports and detail again," Bess murmured carelessly. "You ask Greeny, will you?"

"I surely will."

Tony heard her telling Vince in a low tone that she regretted the scene she had created in the office a few days before. A friend had sent her down some "grape" from Sonoma, and like a fool she had taken some on that hot, hot day. "Frank and I never stay mad very long; we're too old friends," Bess added uneasily. From her tone Tony knew that at all events they were not reconciled after the last unfortunate break.

Mac Ellis Mazzy was strenuously indoctrinating Bessie's lack of pride in coming into the office at all. "My gracious," she whispered to Tony, "He's done with her—I'll go to see her herself in for it. Didn't she send he's done with her, and went off Mrs. Fitch was saving on Saturday night—"

"Oh, you've met Mrs. Fitch?"

"My mother and I went over and had dinner with them on Saturday night."

"Oh?"

"He wants me to do articles about all the country clubs," Mac went on. "It ought to be quite a feature. I was just telling Van and Joe Burke about it, and they say he'll help me do it. They want to run my picture up at the top of the article."

"Marvelous!" Tony commented. In her soul she said: "Well, if it wouldn't make you sick!" Aloud she asked, "What are you getting now, Mac?"

"Fifty."

Tony raised her eyebrows politely; she herself was getting thirty dollars a week.

"She was getting a hundred, when she was getting anything at all," Mac said of Bess. "But the way I figure that out," she added confidentially, "is that Frank Fitch is the honorable kind of man who thinks all women are straight, see? So-until-he's—"

"New associate editor, Greeny?" Tony said smilingly, as the city editor came up to her desk.

"Seems so. Pip, too, from what I hear." Greeny said with a jerk of his head toward Mr. Arnoldson's office upstairs. "Say, Bessie, I want to speak to you a minute," he added.

He and the late editor of the "Bessie Saw It" column withdrew to a quiet corner of the office, and Tony, covertly watching, as they all were, saw that whatever he was saying angered and mortified his companion dangerously.

"Tony, come over here a minute!" the harassed Greeny presently called. "Here's the thing," he explained in a confidential undertone. "Bess here—you know how we all feel about her—she's one of us, she belongs here; that's all right. But Frank—Frank Fitch, see?—he's trying to land something good for her, and he thinks he has landed something good for her, and until he does he thinks it'll be smarter of her not to come in, see? Oh, I mean, of course," Greeny hastened to add confidently, "not to stay away altogether, but—"

"You mean that Frank Fitch don't dare come in here while I'm here, and for good reason," Bessie began ominously. "Well, you're right. I've got something to say to Frank Fitch—"

"Listen, Bess," Tony interrupted. "Will you just listen to me, and then you can say anything you like. You're not going to get anywhere with Frank Fitch this way. You know that; you only make him mad. Now, you clear out, and some day this week Greeny'll telephone you to come down; we'll pick a time when he's in a good humor, won't we Greeny?"

"Get your life!" Greenwood said fervently. For Bess was obviously softening. Encouraged, Tony recommenced with fresh zeal.

"Yes, but I can't walk out now," Bess objected sullenly after a while; "they all know I came down here to see Frank."

"Well, then I'll tell you what you do," said the resourceful Tony. "You and Greeny and I have been talking about new Sunday articles, see? Greeny, you tell Bess now, so that they'll all hear, that she better go into the Sunday room with you and—e Davids. And I'll tell 'em out here you've got a new idea to work up. Good luck, Bess!" she ended hastily, going back to her desk.

When they had gone she sat on, working, telephoning, thinking. These editorial pets who were spasmodically captured for a column of this or that were a sorry crew. Every few months Fitch or Danielson or Arnoldson discovered a genius, a pretty simpleton such as Bess must have been ten years ago, such as Mac was today, and for a while the ordinary work of the staff must be altered to fit the imperious demands of the newcomer.

Presently Mr. Arnoldson came in, and with him, very tall and square-shouldered, and smiling his own characteristic smile, was Larry. The editor-in-chief introduced him to Greeny, the two men knew each other anyway, and shook hands heartily, and then Greeny took him about the office, stopping at the desks, or at the knots of men who gathered in his way. Larry gave Tony a special smile. "Hello, Tony," he said.

* * * * * * *

"Does it mean you'll see much of him?" Brenda asked that night.

"Not necessarily. His office is upstairs, and he'll be frightfully busy getting to know the ropes. Besides, I'm not really there much, except Thursdays," Tony answered. But, just the same, she was surprised that, as the days went by, their paths actually did not cross more often.

Once he was in the city office and nodded at her, and once he was talking hard when Mr. Arnoldson and some other man, going down in the elevator when she got in, and then he naturally only lifted his hat with an obstructed smile of greeting. That was all in the first two weeks of his tenancy of the imposing upstairs office that had his name on the door. Then one Wednesday afternoon she found a note on her desk; just one of the usual carelessly pencilled office notes: "Ruth gets back today; wants you to come up and dine with her tonight."

It was dated "Tuesday," and signed "L. B." Tony twisted it in her fingers for a moment and then telephoned to the office of the business manager to ask if Miss Taft could see Mr. Bellamy. Yes, Miss Taft was pleased to come right up.

Her heart was beating hard as she went upstairs.

"Tony, you look magnificent yourself!"

"I am. Bendy was married at noon today, you know."

"Sure enough! Ruth wired, I think."

"Ruth did more than wire. My nieces and nephews will be born with silver spoons in their mouths, thanks to Ruth."

"But how grand you look!"

"I am beautiful, I think," Tony said complacently. Her dark blue coat was embellished by an immaculate and delicate frill of white; gardenias were on her shoulder, and one gardenia was pressed against the brim of her dark-blue hat. "I've never been so grand."

she observed. "Emily was lovely, too, and her beau papa gave us a noon breakfast at the Fairmont. Then Aunt Meg and Vince Sally went off to weep together, and the Mawters got into their Buick and started for Monterey, and I came down to break the back of my Friday stuff and found this."

She displayed his note.

"I'm terribly sorry, Larry, will you tell Ruth? I went home early yesterday on account of wedding excitement and didn't find this until just this minute. I telephoned," Tony said. "but Chevalier said she was down town."

"I'll tell her, and you telephone in the morning, and cook up something between you." Larry glanced at a paper on his desk.

His tone was somehow horribly disappointing, horribly hurtful. Tony felt the chill of death at her heart. That kind puzzled look—

"What's what's the matter?" she faltered, as he did not speak.

"Is anything?" Larry asked. But she saw the dull red come up under his skin, and she heard the artificial note in the voice he tried to make simple and surprised.

"Well," Tony said thickly, "that's what I'm asking you."

Larry took off his glasses; wiped them; put them on again.

"Then I say that nothing is the matter," he said; and after a moment, as she did not speak, "Sit down, Tony. Perhaps there's something we ought to say, something I ought to say about all this."

She sat down, looking at him expectantly, with her blue eyes heavy with shadows, and her lips trembling. Then suddenly she put her head down on her arm childishly and burst into tears.

"I'm most miserable, Larry!" she sobbed.

* * * * * * *

The burst of tears ended almost as suddenly as it had begun. Tony felt ashamed of herself, and, what was worse, felt that the situation had suddenly gone flat. What was she doing, up here in Larry's office, making a ridiculous scene, she who despised Mac's obvious methods with men and pitied poor Bessie?

Sniffling and gulping, not looking at him, she fumbled for her handkerchief, blew her nose, and wiped her eyes.

"I don't know why I did that," she apologized, swallowing.

Larry was sitting facing her, his big hands on the arms of his chair. The expression of his face was completely non committal; his blue gray eyes were narrowed and fixed on space. Tony's heart sank as she looked at him; he was not going to help her out.

"You know I felt that-way," she said suddenly.

It was all like a dream. The sense of wearing a new dress and a smart hat, the odor of gardenias, the setting of the cheaply finished temporary office, and Larry sitting opposite her with a troubled and stubborn look on his face. The girl had a desperate sullen feeling of suffocation; a desperate need to awaken, to be away from here—somewhere else, somewhere alone in the dark.

HARBOR SPRINGS GIRL CHOSEN WINTER QUEEN

Miss Shirley Squier Chosen at Petoskey Judging Tuesday Night

Miss Shirley Squier, 17-year-old senior in Harbor Springs High school, was named Michigan winter queen in competition with the local queens from eight other Northern Michigan communities at Petoskey Tuesday night.

As Michigan winter queen she will reign over the annual Michigan winter carnival to be held at Petoskey February 7 to 16.

Miss Squier is a striking blond. She weighs 120 pounds and is five feet five and one-half inches tall. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luman Squier.

Miss Squier is vice-president of the senior class and a member of the French and Latin clubs and the Girls' Athletic Association. As Harbor Springs queen she will rule over the winter carnival there February 1 and 2.

Judges for the contest were Ray Ivory, of Grand Rapids, division passenger agent of the Pere Marquette Railway, and two representatives of the Pennsylvania Railroad, F. E. Gerard, general superintendent of the western division, and L. T. Henderson, publicity director, both of Chicago.

Miss Frances Marshall, Charlevoix winter queen, made a very favorable impression at Petoskey. She appeared in the afternoon with her chaperone, Mrs. A. L. Livingston, attired in a striking red snow suit and red fur hat. Her costume for the evening appearance at the Temple theater was a white taffeta formal with wing sleeves. Miss Marshall will be a member of Queen Shirley's court during the annual Michigan Winter Carnival, February 7-16.

The Grand Rapids Press held up publication two hours Tuesday night in order to carry the queen selection in a front page story.

MAY EXTEND SCENIC DRIVE IN ANTRIM CO.

Submit Project to WPA for Continuance South to Eastport

Providing national and state approval is obtained, a scenic highway will be constructed as a WPA project from Eastport to the Charlevoix county line along Grand Traverse Bay.

The project, which would be a continuation of a scenic drive now under construction in Charlevoix and Norwood townships, was outlined at a meeting of the Antrim county road commission recently.

D. T. McHugh, district WPA director, who was in attendance at the meeting, estimated between $9,000 and $14,000 would be expended if the project is approved.

A total of 10,375 women formerly on relief are earning security wages on 198 projects in the 83 counties of the state.

CHILDREN NEED SLEEP AT REGULAR INTERVALS

Strenuous Days, Plenty of Rest, Insure Happiness for Youngsters

Sleep at frequent intervals is necessary for children before the school age, according to Mary Lewis, instructor in Home Management at Michigan State College.

"I would venture to suggest," she stated, "that the child's ordinary daily experiences are as strenuous, as stimulating, and as demanding in frequent adjustments as that of an adult, while on his first tour through foreign lands.

"In order that children may react toward the interests of what appears to us to be a very ordinary day with the abandon characteristic of healthy intelligent youngsters — they must have enough sleep at frequent enough intervals to permit their bodies to recover from the constant stimulations of their waking hours."

Miss Lewis insisted, however, that the sleep periods should not be dragged out since it might interfere with night sleeping habits.

Other conditions necessary for the development of good sleeping habits were given as follows:

(1) regular hours for sleep should be established by parents;

(2) care should be taken to prevent depletion of energy to avoid restlessness and, in extreme cases, tantrums;

(3) sleeping rooms should have rapidly changing currents of air;

(4) children should not be tucked in too tightly in order to permit some freedom of movement;

(5) children should be in good physical condition;

(6) children should be satisfied with their day's activity and at peace with himself.

AT THE MOVIES

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea Teamed Again In "Splendor"

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea, the glamorous romantic team of "Barbary Coast," are together again in "Splendor," Samuel Goldwyn's new production which comes to the Palace Theatre for two days, January 25-26.

The story, written by Rachel Crothers under the new author-producer arrangement whereby the author will share in the profits of the enterprise in lieu of the payment of a specific sum for the script, casts Miss Hopkins in the role of Phyllis Manning, a charming Southern beauty, who marries Brighton Lorrimore, scion of a once-great New York family which clings to its Fifth Avenue mansion as the last symbol of its crumbling grandeur.

Paul Cavanagh, Helen Westley, Billie Burke, David Niven, Katherine Alexander and Ruth Weston are also prominent in the supporting cast of "Splendor." Elliott Nugent directed the film for release through United Artists.

Millions Hinge Upon Secrets Chan Uncovers

The secrets that Warner Oland unearths in his new Fox mystery thriller, "Charlie Chan's Secret," coming January 29-30 to the Palace Theatre, are of the dangerous kind that mean peril and possible death to the man who reveals them.

In the latest picture based on the famous character of Earl Derr Biggers, Oland appears with an all-star supporting cast that includes Rosina Lawrence, Charles Quigley, Henrietta Crosman, Edward Trevor, Astrid Allwyn and the well-known English comedian, Herbert Mundin.

Thirty-four Republican and Democratic candidates had filed nomination petitions for 12 city and ward offices at the deadline Tuesday afternoon, indicating that the 1936 spring primary would be one of the most hotly contested in recent years.

Heading the Republican ticket for the office of mayor are Leonard P. Adams, incumbent, and Arthur Bergeon, who served the city as mayor many years. Robert F. Sloan, present city engineer, is the Democratic candidate for the mayoralty.

No less than 10 Republicans and one Democrat have filed for city treasurer, making this city office the most popular of any being sought. There is a contest for city clerk, also for all but one ward office.

All incumbents are seeking renomination with the exception of F. J. Fessenden for alderman of the second ward.

Following is the complete line-up:

ASK COOPERATION

In order to aid the city street department in its snow removal operations on Bridge street, a request has been made by city officials asking the public to refrain from parking cars on the street throughout the night. Parked automobiles interfere with the work inasmuch as a complete job cannot be done. While the city has no ordinance prohibiting parking on Bridge street at night, one will be adopted unless cooperation is received upon this request.

WEEK'S TEMPERATURES

Charlevoix experienced its most severe period of winter weather during the past week. Low temperatures, coupled with heavy snowfall and winds raised havoc with highway snow removal, cut off train service one day and resulted in many county highways being blocked. Motor traffic on trunk lines was maintained only with 24-hour service from Wednesday until late in the week. M-66 between Charlevoix and East Jordan was plugged several days.

Following are the high and low temperatures for the period of January 22 to 28, inclusive, furnished through courtesy of the U. S. Coast Guard station:

Goes to Petoskey As Member of Michigan Winter Queen's Court—Attends Social Affairs

The duties of royalty will fall heavily, but no doubt pleasantly upon Charlevoix's winter queen, Miss Frances Marshall, in coming weeks.

Queen Frances will return to Petoskey on February 7 to participate as a member of the court at the coronation of Queen Shirley Squier by Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald at the Michigan winter carnival. She is also invited to be one of the guests of honor at a dinner and at the Queen's Ball in Petoskey on February 6. This event will be one of the outstanding affairs of the Northern Michigan social season.

Queen Frances has already attended the carnival program at Boyne City, and has been invited with other Northern Michigan winter queens to the Cheboygan carnival to be held Friday and Saturday.

At the queen's contest at Petoskey, Miss Marshall was presented, along with other contestants, with a sterling silver bracelet. The bracelet is engraved with a brief announcement of membership on the queen's court at the Michigan winter carnival of 1936.

ANNUAL ICE HARVEST WAS STARTED TUESDAY

Charlevoix Coal & Ice Co. Began Operations on Lake Charlevoix

The Charlevoix Coal & Ice Co. started their annual harvest Tuesday morning from Lake Charlevoix.

Equipment was placed and the field prepared Monday, and actual cutting is now under way. Due to the fact last year's local supply was completely exhausted by mid-fall, the harvest this year will be a large one. The company will cut and store around 3,500 tons in the old beet sugar factory, and probably an equal amount for Harry Widdifield, it is understood.

At the start of operations ice 14 inches thick and of excellent clear condition was available.

The harvest for the Belvedere, Hotel Hallett, Chicago Club and The Inn, as well as Booth Fisheries, will be made by D. J. Eckinger and Allen Campbell, it is understood. When work will be started is not known.

PLAN CONSOLIDATION OF SCHOOLS NEAR ELLSWORTH

A large rural consolidated agricultural high school at Ellsworth and a smaller zone school at Atwood are being considered by school officials of districts in that section. Both schools are being improved under WPA projects and could care for the increased enrollment very nicely. The State Department of Public Instruction is furthering the undertaking.

WINTER PROGRAM SATURDAY EVENT

IDEAL WEATHER CONDITIONS FOR CARNIVAL ACTIVITIES

Skiing Contest and Skating Races at Municipal Rink Provided Entertainment—Skating Results

Sponsored by the Charlevoix Polar Bear Winter Sports Club, a program of outdoor winter activities was carried out Saturday.

Members of the Ski Club conducted non-competitive events at slides prepared at Mt. McSauby in the afternoon. Ski fans generally took part in the activities.

A program of speed and fancy skating events featured the evening program at the municipal rink before a crowd of several hundred spectators.

Petoskey sent over a group of speed skaters in charge of Don Barnes, while a group of fancy skaters were supervised by H. Lee North, who also announced the fancy skating program. Several juveniles among the visiting fancy skaters drew much favorable comment. Mr. and Mrs. George Wood and Don Barnes judged the fancy skaters.

Results of the races follow:

Juvenile boys, ½ mile—1st, Archie Livingston.

Junior boys, ½ mile—1st, Lee North, Jr.; 2nd, Orval Feather, both Petoskey. Tied after two heats, this race was decided in a two-lap third heat.

ODD FELLOWS REDUCE MASON CRIBBAGE LEAD

Won Monday Night Contest by Margin of 46 Points—Trail by 630

The Odd Fellows were winners of Monday night's play in the annual cribbage series now in progress, but not by a margin sufficient to alter team standings materially.

Team scores were 16,209 for the Odd Fellows and 16,163 for the Masons, a difference of 46 points. Taking this amount from the previous Masonic lead leaves them still with an advantage of 630 points.

John Curtis was the high Odd Fellow with 942, while Eugene Lewis scored 947 points to lead the Masons. The series will be continued Monday evening, February 3, at the I. O. O. F. hall.

FEAR MOVEMENT TO TAKE TAX OFF FOOD

REDUCED REVENUE WOULD IMPERIL STATE'S BUDGET

Detroit Man Circulated Petitions Proposing to Remove Sales Tax from Foodstuffs

Those charged with the success and solvency of state finances are giving some serious consideration to the movement sponsored by Frederick A. Wayne, of Detroit, to write into the constitution a clause that would prohibit a sales tax on food.

Wayne, who is chairman of the Taxpayers' Protective Association, which he organized in 1931, says he has secured 100,000 names on his petitions and that is more than half the number he will need to place the proposal upon the ballot next November.

Once on the ballot it would be, admittedly, a hard proposition to beat because the voters have demonstrated in the case of the income tax and the 15 mill real estate tax limit that they will vote for anything that cuts existing taxes even if it does mean new and harder ones.

If the tax were taken off the foods which are bought from groceries—and incidentally grocers are Wayne's helpers—the loss in sales tax collections each year would range from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000, it is estimated. No exact figures are available. But Wayne also would prohibit the sales tax upon meals bought in restaurants which would mean a minimum annual reduction in collections of upwards of $15,000,000 and maybe more.

While the state at the present moment is apparently collecting a few dollars more than it is spending, for the first time in years, the treasury is still not in a position to suffer a loss of $15,000,000 or more annually and something would have to be done to obtain more cash through new sources if the Wayne proposition passed.

The answer probably would be some sort of an income tax even though such a levy has been a pill that the voters have refused to swallow on several occasions.

What campaign position the administration will take on the Wayne proposal has not been indicated. Probably it will take no position because Governor Fitzgerald campaigned in 1934 with the promise that he would take the Democratic tax off food. Once in office he found that he could not do so and make both ends meet.

COURT GRANTS HEARING ON PLEA BY PRISONER

Man Convicted in Charlevoix Courts Gets Review of Case

Otto Van Dyke, inmate of the State Prison of Southern Michigan, acting as his own attorney, convinced the Michigan Supreme Court Tuesday that it should review his case.

Convicted of breaking into the Walloon Lake post office in Charlevoix county, and sentenced to 20 to 32 years, he contends his imprisonment is illegal because the case should have been tried in federal rather than circuit court. The United States Supreme Court refused to consider his petition, holding that the argument was one for the state courts.

The Supreme Court granted him a writ of habeas corpus Tuesday, which means merely that it will consider arguments for and against the point he has raised.

MUNICIPAL GOLF COURSE STUDIED

CITY MAY TAKE OVER CHARLEVOIX GOLF CLUB

City Officials and Kiwanis Club Approached on Matter—Committees Named to Study Proposal

Of major importance to the interests of this city is the rapidly developing possibility of municipal management and operation of the 18-hole course of the Charlevoix Golf Club.

Beset by financial difficulties in the operation of the course for several years, directors of the golf club, rather than close the course to play, have approached the city through its officials and also by a communication directed to the Kiwanis Club, on a proposition of municipal operation.

Developments on the matter have been rapid within the past week. The Kiwanis has appointed a committee composed of Robert Ilridge, Charles Hamlin and Dr. R. B. Armstrong to study the proposition. Monday night Mayor L. P. Adams appointed a council committee composed of Aldermen P. D. Campbell, Arthur Ranger and Leo W. Carey to go into the proposal. It is expected the two committees will make a joint report at the next meeting of the council to be held Monday evening, February 10.

It is the general consensus of opinion that Charlevoix, as a resort city, cannot afford to let the golf course be closed under any circumstances, also that municipal management of the course is possible, with a nominal greens fee, without an operation deficit.

Several proposals have been made in regard to the method of management, and all will come up for discussion at the joint committee meeting.

URGE CARE IN THAWING OF WATER PIPES

Carelessness With Fire in This Operation Often Is Disastrous

In spite of heavy firing against zero weather and wintry winds, the local fire department has received no calls during the storm and cold weather of the past several weeks.

Chief Charles Marshall is not too optimistic, however, and fears that attempts to thaw frozen pipes in the wake of the cold weather may give his department employment.

"There are only two safe ways to thaw frozen water pipes," Chief Marshall states. "Electricity is one and it must be handled by experts. The other and safe home method is with cloths soaked in hot water. The most dangerous method is with open flames and a big percentage of these attempts result in setting the building afire. Burning newspapers looks like a quick method of thawing but it is no quicker than hot water and many times more dangerous."

The chief also asked that all persons watch their heating plants during the low temperatures to prevent them becoming overheated.

Team Crippled by Loss of Gallagher, Center — Charlevoix Scored 21 to 11 Win Over Mancelona Friday

Charlevoix's Red Rayders ran into an unexpected upset Tuesday night at Boyne City, losing by a 13 to 10 score.

Playing without the services of Gallagher, center, lost to the team the same day due to blood poisoning in his hand, the Rayders failed to get under way until the second half and then too late to overcome an earlier Boyne lead.

Charlevoix scored a single point in the first half while Boyne ran up 10. They held Boyne scoreless the next period while marking up four points and out-scored the winners 4 to 3 in the final stanza.

SUMMER RESIDENT DIED AT ANN ARBOR

Louis C. Stanley, Belvedere Cottage Owner, Succumbed January 18

Charlevoix residents will learn with regret of the death at Ann Arbor on Saturday, January 18th, of Louis C. Stanley, well known and long-time summer resident of the Belvedere Club.

Mr. Stanley, for 40 years an attorney for the Grand Trunk Western Railroad at Detroit, was a graduate of the University of Michigan. He retired from law practice about 15 years ago and since had traveled extensively.

The family owned and occupied Cottage 122 on the Belvedere Club for many years.

PERE MARQUETTE NOT TO CHANGE TRAIN SERVICE

Of particular interest to Charlevoix citizens is the announcement by F. V. Tyler, secretary of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, of receipt of a communication from John Dunphey, general passenger agent of the Pere Marquette Railway Co., that a recent proposal to change from regular to a combination freight and passenger train between Traverse City and Petoskey has been definitely abandoned.

Singing With a Purpose

Millions of Americans will celebrate the 1936 Birthday Ball for the President, but probably none with more gusto than Joseph Lapuma, shown above with Mary Lewis, opera singer, who for years has suffered from infantile paralysis, will make his first big public appearance on the night of the ball, Jan. 30th, when he sings before a swank supper gathering at the Central Park Casino, New York. Like thousands of other [illegible] over the nation, Joe got his chance through the Birthday Ball funds which will be used to wage nation-wide war on infantile paralysis. Now studying under the guidance of Miss Lewis, critics say he is destined for a brilliant operatic career.

Burton Russell has returned from work in Detroit and, we hear, intends to stay here indefinitely.

John Dawson now drives a sleigh with a box shelter to and from his farm. Bents the car. Takes no oil or gas.

Mrs. Erickson now has charge of the N. E. baked goods at her residence on North Main street, near the Alberts barber shop.

A son is reported born to Mrs. Carrie Dewey Stoel, wife of Harold Stoel, and teacher in the Wright district near Ellsworth.

The little Parker boy, who was accidentally shot some years ago by a son of Richard Kirby, had a relapse but is some better again.

Edward Dawson was home Saturday from work at a wood camp east of Mancelona. Snow out that way, we hear, is about five feet deep.

The ministerial convention convenes at East Jordan on Monday, February 3, it is announced. We suppose this means if weather is favorable.

North Michigan has had some bad blizzards, but no extreme cold as in other parts of the country. About 18 below has been the limit here. No deaths or accidents are recorded.

O. R. Morse, who was taken ill this time and about two years ago about the same time as Mr. Dunsmore, is able to sit up in a wheel chair, and is feeling quite a lot better.

The mail man could not get through on the Farrel road Monday morning, but the Bay View-Holland road was safe for travel. The big ruck snow plow, however, made four trips over both roads.

Andy Dunsmore is around greeting his many friends again after quite an illness due to heart trouble. Andy is one of our efficient conservation officers, and always a jovial citizen. Glad to see him out again.

Donald Farrel, son of Earl Farrel, is detained at home from high school this week with a bad cold. Earl had to wait until the snow plow went through before he could get out to gather up cream Monday morning.

Harry Lewis was held up on his work on the Central Lake-Ellsworth road grading last week on account of the bad weather. Lloyd and Doyle Morse have both purchased a truck, and have been drawing gravel on the road near Bellaire.

The John Farrel and Earl Farrel families were called to see William Dewey, at Bellaire, again last Sunday. Mr. Dewey had been quite ill a few weeks ago, but had been reported as much better. He was taken worse again this week.

William Alberts and F. M. Malone, Sr., took the post office examination last week for the office of postmaster at this place, which changes hands, we hear, February 7. They are both good Democrats, and it is a "toss-up" as to who gets the position.

James Dawson has closed his shingle mill until the snow goes down so that people can get in the timber. He says there were about 200 shingles to be gotten out. Perry Carpenter, of Bellaire, who has been assisting with his gas engine, has left for his home in Bellaire.

Rev. E. M. Mumby gave a young couple from Charlevoix a ride as far as Eastport last Sunday. They were walking from Charlevoix to Elk Rapids. It was thought by many a pretty serious undertaking against a head wind and the mercury registering zero. We wonder whether they escaped being frozen.

The weather man promises us warmer weather this week, Wednesday. If people have watched carefully, they will have seen that about the 26th to 29th of each month there is a change for warm or cold weather and then we have about two weeks of warm and three of cold or stormy weather. When corns begin to trouble a person, look out for warmer weather. If they had limited the supply of corns, instead of corn, and put a bounty on it, it would have been more beneficial.

FAIRVIEW-BANKS

Lots of snow, and snowstorm this week.

Days are getting quite a bit longer again, and it will soon be spring.

The county snow plow is quite busy these days and nights, keeping our main roads open.

The party who has a lot of nice dry hard wood for his stoves nowadays will certainly enjoy it.

Ben Timmer and Harry DeGroot were callers in Maple Hill district Monday, and report lots of snow over there.

Our county men who are working on the road at present certainly have some job on hand in this cold weather.

H. Willis died Saturday morning after an illness of some months, as we understand. Mr. Willis was past 90 years of age. Funeral will be from H. Dawson's funeral home in Ellsworth.

During the past week we have had some of the worst weather of the season, roads were piled high with snow, and snow plows hardly able to clear them before they were piled full again, and when cleared it was not safe to drive because of blowing snow. Many cars were left stranded, making the clearing of roads more dangerous.

The P.-T. A. meeting, held last Tuesday evening, was well attended in spite of the unfavorable weather. Mr. Klienert gave quite a talk on the consolidation of the schools in this township. It was very interesting. Friday afternoon of this week, at 2 o'clock, he will give an address at the town hall in Atwood. If at all possible, try to be there.

The recreation program, under the WPA project, has gotten under way. Meetings are held regularly at the school house, with Mr. Mudge, of Eastport, supervising. The skating rink is not yet completed. According to P. Wieland, there seems to be a hole in it which prevents the flooding, though it must be said the men have worked hard to complete it.

Our community experienced its first real blizzard this winter, the past week. The section of road past the Shaw farms was impassable for three days, which caused quite a hold-up in the traffic. Cars and trucks were forced to return to East Jordan and drive around the lake to Charlevoix.

RECIPES FOR TODAY

By Alice Hale Kent

Chief Dietitian, Home Economics Authority, Michigan Bakeries, Inc.

Come—Let's Make Some Cookies!

There's something about the crispness and snap of a cookie that sends me scurrying to the kitchen to gather up my mixing bowls every time I find my gaily decorated cookie jar empty! I think most everyone likes good cookies, and the sweet, spicy aroma when they're baking is grand — almost too grand, because this fragrance always seems to bring the family to the kitchen on the run, and you have to step over and around them while you finish the baking! A cookie, like everything else, has its secrets, and being a woman, I'll have to pass them on. Space does not permit my going into detail, but I shall give you a few pointers that I believe will be helpful to you:

1. All cookies have a common desire to be chilled before baking.
2. Most cookies like to be baked at a high temperature.
3. All cookies must be removed from the pan in a hurry, with the exception of the date bar and brownie type.
4. Every cookie should be cooled on a rack.
5. To keep crisp cookies crunchy, place freshly baked cookies in a tight tin box lined with wax paper.
6. To keep drop cookies soft and mellow, tuck in a stone or porcelain jar with an apple or orange for moisture.

Personally, I like to make ice box cookies for these are truly wife-savers. They may be made and stored in the refrigerator, along with a variety of rolled or ribbon sandwiches, made of white and dark breads, and you are always ready for any guests that might stop in for tea. Here are some of my prized cookie concoctions which I believe you will want to add to your cook book:

Ice Box Cookies

1 cup dry brend crumbs, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ⅛ teaspoon salt, ½ cup brown sugar, ½ cup white sugar, ¼ cup butter, 1 egg, well beaten, ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Combine crumbs, baking powder, salt, sugar and butter. Add well-benten egg and vanilla and mix thoroughly. Shape into a roll. Chill in refrigerator overnight. When ready to bake, slice in thin slices and place on buttered baking sheet several inches apart. Bake in 400 degree F. oven until brown.

Snappy Ann

1 cup brend crumbs, ½ cup brown sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon ginger, ½ teaspoon soda, 2 eggs, beaten, 1 tablespoon butter, melted, 1 teaspoon vanilla, ¼ cup molasses.

Combine dry ingredients, add beaten eggs, melted butter, vanilla and molasses. Drop from spoon onto buttered baking sheet. Bake in hot oven 400 degrees F. for 15 or 20 minutes or until brown.

Crunches

1 cup sweetened condensed milk, 1 cup nuts, chopped, 1 cup dry bread crumbs, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons cinnamon, ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Combine all ingredients. Drop by spoonfuls onto buttered baking sheet. Bake in oven about 375 degrees F. until a golden brown. (About 12 minutes.)

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Home Care of the Scarlet Fever Patient

Ninety-five per cent of the cases of scarlet fever in our state occur in children under 15 years of age, showing that it is a disease chiefly of school age. Most of our cases usually take place in late winter and early spring. During 1935 our district, composed of the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego, had 32 cases of scarlet fever compared with 157 in 1934 and 348 in 1933. However, we had one death reported from scarlet fever in 1935 as compared with no deaths in 1934 and seven deaths in 1933. Apparently we need have no alarm at present of an increase in the severity of the disease.

Although some workers have advocated the Dick toxin for active immunization against scarlet fever together with the Dick test, there is some question as to whether adequate protection is given over a long enough period of time to warrant its use. At least we can generally say that our health department does not believe in active immunization against scarlet fever as a wholesale measure through the schools or elsewhere. A severe virulent infection with a rapid spreading epidemic might, on the other hand, necessitate a change of view on this point.

Practically all scarlet fever is spread by discharges from the nose and throat of a scarlet fever case or carrier, entering the nose and throat of a non-immune individual. It is, therefore, advisable to avoid contacts and convalescents from this disease. Of course any disease brings terror into every mother's heart but the fact of its being a contagious disease brings additional fear. The question as to whether a child should be taken to a hospital and whether his presence in the house will endanger other members of the family are many things that worry the parents. While every communicable disease is potentially a dangerous one, with early detection, isolation and careful nursing, many cases may quite safely be nursed in the home.

The patient's room should be isolated if possible and should be sparsely furnished. A set of dishes should be set aside for his use. They should be washed in the bathroom and never returned to the kitchen to be mixed with the regular house dishes. A still better plan is to use when possible paper plates and cups which can be burned after each meal, this leaving only the silverware to be taken care of, which can be sterilized by boiling. Food prepared in the kitchen may be brought to the door of the patient's room in covered containers and transferred to the patient's dishes. The mother in leaving the patient's room, should be extremely careful to acquire such cleanliness that she will not carry any germs. Such home care and precautions as these lessen the liability of transferring the disease to other members of the family.

AMERICAN LEGION ACTIVITIES

A committee is considering plans for a Washington's Birthday dance at The Argonne on February 22nd. More can be told about this after they report at the next regular meeting.

Ten amateurs have volunteered, so far, for the Legion's Amateur Night performance. "Major Bowes" Meggison, acting chairman, considers this is a good start, but—keep coming, folks, if you can perform any kind of a stunt. The more the merrier.

Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226 has been cited by Legion national headquarters for having secured a 1936 membership equal to that of 1935 and for accomplishing this feat prior to Armistice Day. The citation, which is a handsome piece of art work, will soon find its place on the wall of the Legion Home in an appropriate frame.

Rumors are rife of a big Legion and Auxiliary get-together party at East Jordan, some time early in February. This will take in members of all three posts and units of the county. With the bonus as an inspiration, this should be a great "soiree." If you don't know what this last word means, ask the writer, as he attended one not so long ago.

STATE OF MICHIGAN

To the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix in Chancery:

The petition of John J. O'Hara, Auditor General of the State of Michigan, for and in behalf of said State, respectfully shows that the list of lands hereinafter set forth and marked "Schedule A," contains a description of all lands in said County of Charlevoix upon which taxes were assessed for the years mentioned therein, and which were returned as delinquent for non-payment of taxes, and which taxes have not been paid; together with the total amount of such taxes, with interest computed thereon to the time fixed for sale, and collection fee and expenses, as provided by law, extended against each of said parcels of land.

Your petitioner further shows to the Court that said lands were returned to the Auditor General under the provisions of Act 206 of the Public Acts of 1893, as delinquent for non-payment of said taxes for said years respectively, and that said taxes remain unpaid; except that lands included in said "Schedule A" for taxes of 1890 or prior years were returned to the Auditor General as delinquent for said taxes under the provisions of the general tax laws in force prior to the passage of Act 200 of the Public Acts of 1891, and which taxes remain unpaid.

Your petitioner further shows that in all cases where lands are included in "Schedule A" as aforesaid for taxes of 1890 or of any prior year, said lands have not been sold for said taxes or have been heretofore sold for said delinquent taxes and the sale or sales so made have been set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction, or have been cancelled as provided by law.

Your petitioner further shows that in all cases where lands are included in "Schedule A," as aforesaid, for the first instalment of taxes of 1932, or of any prior year, said lands have not been sold for said taxes or have been heretofore sold for delinquent taxes and the sale, or sales, so made have been set aside by court of competent jurisdiction by Legislative Action (See Act 126, P. A. of 1933, as amended by Act 11, Extra Session of 1934, as amended by Act 73, P. A. of 1935), or have been cancelled as provided by law.

Your petitioner further shows and avers that the taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses as set forth in said "Schedule A," are a valid lien on the several parcels of lands described in said schedule.

Your petitioner further shows that the said taxes on the said described lands have remained unpaid for more than one year after they were returned as delinquent; and the said taxes not having been paid, and the same being now due and remaining unpaid as above set forth, your petitioner prays a decree in favor of the State of Michigan against each parcel of said lands, for the payment of the several amounts of taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses, as computed and extended in said schedule against the several parcels of land contained therein, and in default of payment of the said several sums computed and extended against said lands, that each of said parcels of land may be sold for the amounts due thereon, as provided by law, to pay the lien aforesaid.

"However, if you don't understand me, Larry—" she began, with broken dignity. And with hands that trembled she gathered up her bag, and the new soft white gloves.

"If I did," Larry said suddenly. "Then what?"

For a second she stared at him, paling. Then dully, hopelessly she looked away.

"I don't know," she said.

"Exactly," Larry added briefly. There was silence again.

"Don't think I'm glad about it," Tony said, standing up. And confusedly, as he made no comment, she added, "I had no idea of—of saying all this—"

After a pause he said, somewhat unnaturally, in a careless everyday voice: "Oh, that doesn't do any harm."

Tony was fitting on the soft new white gloves, her bag caught up lightly under her arm.

"And you'll give my message to Ruth?" she said, trying for an ordinary tone.

"I will indeed."

"I'll telephone her and make a tea date." Tony walked to the door, looked back, nodded a good-by, and went out, closing the door carefully behind her.

Back at her desk in the city room again Tony found herself inclined to talk aloud. From her bag she tumbled out on her desk several odds and ends of paper upon which social notes were scratched. Rendy's wedding was over now, and she must get down to business.

"Oh, you fool!" she said under her breath. She ranged the little notes before her without seeing them; slipped a sheet of yellow paper into her typewriter. "What of it—what of it—what of it?" she said fiercely. "What do you care what he thinks? He knows I'm crazy about him. What of it? I wish I hadn't gone up there! I could have sent a note. Darling Rendy—she looked so sweet. I wonder how it'd feel to be married to a man who made you feel completely crazy, nutty, the way I feel now. Going off with him in a car for Monterey—oh, I wish I hadn't gone up to his office! What did he say? Did he say anything at all? No, he didn't. He just sat there and was sorry for me."

She brought her mind to her notes: the bridesmaids for the Di Milano wedding had been picked. Mrs. James Lee Fairchild and her daughter Miss Janet were leaving for the East, where Miss Janet would be placed in a girls' school. Mrs. J. Kane Kelly was entertaining for her niece, Miss Barbara Fairchild.

Tony felt broken and sick; her head ached. She could not keep her mind on what she was doing. At six o'clock she walked home. The walk seemed nothing tonight. The nervous energy that drove her would have carried her on for miles without fatigue or even consciousness. Reaching her own room she changed from her wedding garments jerkily, spasmodically; sometimes hurrying as if driven, sometimes stopping short to fall into restless and feverish thought. There was a telegram; blood rushed into her face, and her fingers trembled as she opened it. It was only a few words of love and gratitude from San Jose, signed "Brenda and Alvin Atwater."

"They don't care who knows they're bride and groom," Tony thought. "Oh, Larry—Larry!" She put her hands to her head and squeezed her palms against her temples.

In the sitting room Aunt Meg, Aunt Sally and her daughter Violet, still in their wedding regalia, were upon the inexhaustible subject of Brenda's marriage.

Tony sat down, handing the telegram to her aunt.

"See that? She couldn't wait to sign her new name."

"The place seems perfectly forlorn without her," Miss Bruce said tremulously.

"It's just the time she usually came home every night, so sweet and amiable always, and so interested!"

The telephone rang, and Tony sprang to it, her heart was beating so hard and her senses in such confusion that it was difficult for a moment to identify the speaker at the other end of the line. Ruth—it was Ruth—

"Hello, Tony! Did you know that I was home? We got home yesterday."

"I did. I telephoned just before I left the office, but you were lying down. And I didn't get your dinner message until today."

"We made the run in ten hours! From Los Angeles!" Ruth was happily exclamatory. "I went down there to see my cousin Ethel and her three delicious girls. I was so tired. Well, Tony, this is what I wanted. Any chance of your coming up to dinner tonight? Just the three of us, and Larry won't be here until half-past seven."

"I'd love it, but I can't. My Aunt Sally's here, and we're all talking wedding."

"And did Brenda look pretty?"

"She looked lovely. She was awfully pale this morning, but when we got to the church—"

"I thought it was yesterday!"

"No, this morning. I suppose I'm saying words," Tony thought, "but I don't know what it's all about."

"Oh, well, then, my dear, of course they want you at home. But, Tony, I've got to see you," Ruth protested. "What are you doing for lunch tomorrow—can you meet me at the Palace? I've got to go look at a desk for Larry. This is a profound secret, by the way, it's for his birthday. And you come along!"

"Tomorrow's Thursday—I'll be down at the office in the morning," Tony mused aloud. "Yes, I could do that. But I'll have to be back about half-past two."

Tony went back to the women in the sitting room.

"That was Mrs. Bellamy."

"You could have gone in dinner, Tony."

"I know, Aunt Meg. But I really didn't want to." She began to straighten the books in the cases; every muscle in her body seemed inclined to jerk and tear; it seemed impossible to go on quietly stacking books; it seemed impossible to speak quietly rather than to shriek. The fever in her soul was like a pain, more dreadful than any pain she had ever known.

Tony stood by the window looking out. The city was muffled in fog now. It was moving softly, stealthily in; she could telephone Larry. About what? About anything. "Larry, I made an engagement with Ruth for tomorrow, and now I have to break it, and she doesn't answer her telephone." But she would answer her telephone, of course. Chevalier was there to attest that Miss Taft had not telephoned; she would say that he had been there all afternoon.

Oh, was anything ever so dreary as twilight on a cold, windy, foggy September afternoon! Brenda wouldn't think so, though. She and her Alvin had an apartment of four rooms waiting; little gas stove, little fireplace, cheap little white curtains that Brenda had made, cheap little china set, and Ruth's lovely silver. The bare little sitting room would be lighted tonight with Bruce's lamp, furnished with Tony's and Clifford's gift; the two fat chairs and the davenport in ribbed dark-green corduroy, the narrow long table whose black walnut surface was so cleverly nicked and stained, the "extra" chair with its tavern back and monkish seat in dark fruitwood.

Tony wondered tonight how much real ecstasy and passion had gone to Brenda's marrying. Love was there, of course, but what sort of love? She had been tremendously pleased at Alvin's adoration; she had been maternal and amused; very sure of herself. All her phrases for Alvin were motherly.

That was one way of loving; perhaps the most satisfying of all, to Brenda. But there were other ways. There was the way of a woman of twenty-five and a man nearly ten years older; a way that included admiration, all the respectful homage that a girl loves to give to a man, and this tearing agony of physical need, too. Brenda had been the first person to discover the charm of Alvin; but everyone adored Larry. There was not a man in the office who had not felt the stimulus and inspiration of his coming. He was forceful, dynamic, an instantly impressive and memorable personality. Alvin had taken his completely happy wife to four rather ordinary rooms in Monterey; Larry—ah, what wouldn't he do — what couldn't he do for the woman he loved!

While she thought her odd restless disconnected thoughts, Tony had been staring out of the window. Now, without being exactly conscious of what she did, she went into the kitchen, propping the swinging door open so that she could go on with the general conversation.

"How's potatoes Suzette, Aunt Meg, and a salad, and the custard?"

"Oh, now, listen," Miss Bruce said, with an awakening face. "If you're going to have potatoes Suzette, count your poor old aunt in. We haven't had them for months!"

"Just as easy to do six as four, Aunt Sally."

"Well, my dear, now that you mention it, I do believe I'll telephone Allan—"

Time droned on; it would always be like this, now. Dishes and toast and the foggy view of southern downtown from the window, and the voices of stupid sweet affectionate aunts. Tony's body writhed; she felt as if her soul were writhing.

After a while the Cravens were going, with many weary good-bys. Then Tony was making up Cliff's bed in the sitting-room, touched by Bruce's clumsy help, by Cliff opening of windows and straightening of chairs; they didn't want her to miss Brenda too much. Aunt Meggy had retired into her room, and Tony suspected that she was crying as she got ready for bed.

Everything seemed very quiet and lonesome without Brenda, but as she lay awake that night looking wide-eyed at the angle of moonshine that came down the shaft and kept the room bright, Tony was not thinking of her sister. Her body seemed on springs; there was no sleep anywhere; there was no lying still.

CHAPTER XVI

Toward morning she fell into uneasy dream-ridden slumber; Ruth was a small gray mule, Ruth had always been a small gray mule, it seemed, inexplicably married to Larry. It was all quite natural and taken-for-granted in the dream. They were all going to China on a large ship with newspaper presses crushing and crushing punctually on the deck—

Aunt Meggy waked her at ten. Wasn't there a very important club meeting to settle the question of clean vegetable markets, at eleven?

"At half-past ten!" Tony ejaculated, out of bed before the apologetic plenaant voice had stopped. "No, no coffee, Aunt Meg. I'm lunching with Ruth; I'll make it up then!"

She was assuming her wedding garments with all possible speed as she spoke: dark blue suit, white frill, dark blue and white hat, and the resuscitated gardenias pinned carefully on her shoulder.

Tony walked two brisk blocks in morning fog, got on a street car, transferred. At twenty-nine minutes to eleven she entered the big brown imposing clubhouse, ascended in the elevator with a score of well-dressed, middle-aged, murmuring women. The auditorium was only half filled, but the chairwoman and a few satellites were already grouped about a little table in the center of the platform, and the press women were seated at their own table below. Tony slipped into a chair, laid out yellow paper, murmured to her associates.

Over the city the autumn morning brightened into crystal splendor; the fog was gone, and the shopping streets were thronged in the warm clear noon. In the clubhouse matters dragged on. Would someone please make a motion? It is moved and seconded—

Tony came out into the street at quarter-past twelve, went down to the empty office and typed a few notes, went out again and walked down to the long cool restful arcade of the Palace. Ruth was there—not a gray mule at all, but quite smart in pale gray cloth, with a gray hat and gray slippers, with violets fresh and fragrant on her coat collar, and a gray fur about her shoulders.

"What are you grinning at, you absurd girl?" Ruth asked, as they kissed.

"A ridiculous dream I had about you last night."

They followed the head waiter between tables, were established in a quiet corner of the arcade; there were menus, music.

"Crabs are back. Let's have something crabby."

"I always have sand dabs at the Palace," Tony laughed. "I think I've been here five times in my life," she confessed.

"We stayed here, Larry and I, and Mother and little Pete, when we first came to California," Ruth said, with a little change in her voice. She did not often speak of her son, and when she did it was always with this little drop in tone, this flattening of expression.

Tony's own bright face clouded. As

ANNOUNCES $25-A-MONTH TIME PAYMENTS AND A NEW UCC 6% FINANCE PLAN

Any New Ford V-8 Car Can Now Be Purchased for $25 a Month with Usual Low Down-Payment

THIS $25-a-month time-payment plan enables you to buy a New Ford V-8 car through your Ford dealer on new low monthly terms.

After the usual low down-payment is made, $25 a month is all you have to pay for any type of new car, including insurance and financing.

Your cost for this extension of credit is only ½ of 1% a month on your original unpaid balance and insurance. This plan reduces financing charges for twelve months to 6%. For example, if you owe a balance of $400 for your car and insurance, you pay $24 for the year of credit; if the balance is $200 you pay $12. Your credit cost for one year is the original unpaid balance multiplied by 6%.

UCC plans provide you with insurance protection at regular conference rates. You have not only fire and theft insurance, but $50 deductible collision, and protection against other accidental physical damage to your car.

The Universal Credit Company has made these plans available through all Ford dealers in the United States.

Cooper, Arlen Star as Rivals in "Virginian"

The plot of Paramount's "The Virginian," which comes Wednesday and Thursday, February 5-6, to the Palace Theatre, for a return engagement, deals with the rivalry between two gun-toting cowboys, Gary Cooper and Richard Arlen, both rivals for the hand of Mary Brian.

Walter Huston, who is their common enemy, manages to inveigle the wild and impulsive Arlen into his cattle-rustling activities. When Arlen is caught by a posse headed by his pal Cooper and hanged, Mary Brian believes that Cooper had chosen this means to get rid of his rival.

Cooper swears to get Huston. But his love for Mary Brian, who makes him promise not to shoot it out with Huston, holds him back from revenge.

Then Huston comes to town and gives Cooper until sundown to leave. Torn between honor and love, Cooper finally finds a solution in a bang-up, thrilling climax.

Victor Fleming directed the film, adapted from the play by Owen Wister and Kirk LaShelle.

STARTING ANEW

The American people and Washington should not overlook the important fact that, while the United States Supreme Court declared the AAA unconstiutional it did not close the door to legal ways for helping the farmer. When the decision was announced many predicted industrial chaos. That did not happen. Instead the country has enjoyed a revival of business. As the days go by the fear that outlawing the AAA would bring about the collapse of agriculture is slowly diminishing. We know the farmer cannot exist on five-cent cotton, 15-cent corn, and 25-cent wheat. That condition must be avoided in the future. Since the court decision some have advanced a plan for constitutional revision. Others believe constitutional methods can be found to place agriculture on an equal footing with other industries. It is a maximum of fact that no program for farm relief will prove of lasting value that does not come within constitutional limitations. We have an idea that is the course America will choose to follow.

WHY THOSE TEARS

The forgotten man, over whose plight crocodile tears flowed unchecked a few years ago, should take a leaf out of the painful experiment of the government ruising commodity prices through a processing tax. The processors paid a processing tax to the government and immediately passed them on to the retailer, who in turn collected them from his customers. When the tax was declared unconstitutional $200,000,000 of impounded taxes were ordered returned to the processors, who had paid them under protest. The consumer who saw his living costs shoot skyward paid the bill. He should remember this the next time somebody comes along and asks him to join another braintruster movement designed for his salvation.

PLANS ARE COMPLETED FOR PRESIDENT'S BALL

Third Annual Charlevoix Co. Party Thursday Night at The Argonne

Plans have been completed for the third annual President's Birthday Ball to be held Thursday night at The Argonne, according to Bill Superaw and Dan McCann, who have been arranging the party.

On the same night, the President's 54th birthday, more than 5,000 cities and towns all over the United States will unite in their third country-wide party. The purpose of this Birthday Ball for President is to establish through the direct help of the citizens of the country an endowment fund so that the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation and other agencies engaged in the fight against infantile paralysis may carry on the national crusade. Seventy per cent of the proceeds will go to the community in which they are raised; 30 per cent will be sent to Warm Springs Foundation.

And the best of it is that everyone can take part. It need not even be done in a spirit of self-sacrifice, for there is no one who will not enjoy the Birthday Ball for the President. So come to the ball and be gay. Be doubly gay, for your good time will be doubled by the satisfaction of knowing that you are doing good.

Admission will be 75 cents per person, including chicken dinner.

HAVE YOU OBTAINED 1936 FISH LICENSE?

It Is Illegal to Fish on State Inland Water If You Haven't

Do you have your 1936 fishing license? Unless you do, you cannot legally fish through the ice on inland waters, says the Fisheries Division, Department of Conservation.

Many fishermen evidently have been slow to understand provisions of the general fishing license law, now in its third year of enforcement. The belief persists in some quarters that a license is not necessary for ice fishing on inland waters. This is erroneous, the Fisheries Division points out. All residents over 18 years of age are required by law to have a general fishing license so as to fish in any manner on the inland waters of the state.

Trout fishermen are now counting the days until the opening of trout-fishing season, April 26. Only 87 days remain, says the Fisheries Division.

ECKERT-PARSONS WEDDING EVENT OF SATURDAY AT ALPENA

Marriage vows were spoken Saturday evening at 8 o'clock at St. Paul's Lutheran church in Alpena, when Miss Esther Eckert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Eckert, of this city, was united in marriage to Harry Parsons, of Petoskey.

Attending the couple were Mrs. Victor Grosch, of Flint, (formerly Helen Eckert), and Carl Eckert, the bride's brother, of Alpena.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Eckert, of Alpena, brother and sister-in-law of the bride, gave a reception for the newlyweds at their home. Guests attended from Flint, Alpena, Charlevoix and Ellsworth.

Mr. and Mrs. Parsons will reside at Petoskey.

LEGION ACTIVITIES
By F. V. Tyler

The post has accepted the proposition made to it by the manager of The Argonne for a Washington's Birthday dance on the evening of February 22nd, to which the public is cordially invited. The committee was charged with the arrangement of details at Tuesday evening's regular meeting. Further advertisement of this dance will appear in a later issue of this paper.

Two more amateur performers have offered their services for the Legion Amateur Night. This makes 12. More are needed. Apply to Clarence Meggison at the post office, or Bert Taylor at the state liquor store.

Word has come from department headquarters that the bonus applications are on the press and will be forwarded to the various posts within a day or two. Next Tuesday evening, February 4th, all ex-servicemen and Legionnaires in the Charlevoix district are invited to meet at the Legion home of Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226 on East Garfield avenue, Charlevoix, for the purpose of making application for the bonus. Blanks will be on hand and notaries with seal will be present to help get the applications in shape. Luncheon will be served—"on the post." Eight o'clock is the hour.

Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226 has been cited by Legion national headquarters for having secured a 1936 membership equal to that of 1935 and for accomplishing this feat prior to Armistice Day. The citation, which is a handsome piece of art work, will soon find its place on the wall of the Legion home in an appropriate frame.

CHEBOYGAN ANNOUNCES ITS WINTER CARNIVAL

Second Annual Event January 31 and February 1

Cheboygan's second annual winter carnival will be held on January 31 and February 1. The celebration this year is expected to greatly surpass the variety of entertainment provided the thousands of winter sports enthusiasts who attended Cheboygan's first carnival there last year.

Although the carnival is officially scheduled for January 31 and February 1, it will actually get off to an enjoyable start on the evening of January 30, when the Queen's Ball will be held in the Thompson gymnasium. The ball will be a semi-formal affair. Coronation of Queen Elizabeth Mitchell and Prince John Kneale Corlett and Princess Beverly K. Martin as well as the presentation of the young ladies in the royal court will occur at the ball. The Queen's court includes the Misses. Veva Brooks, Nuella Maltby, Lottie Jankoviak and Mary Davis.

Hockey games between the Cheboygan Winter Sports Club hockey team and the Petoskey Winter Sports Club hockey team and a Mackinaw City hockey team will be held on each of the carnival celebration days.

Figure and speed skating also come in for a good share of the entertainment during the carnival as will snow shoeing, skiing, and tobogganing on a huge hill just at the edge of the city.

NATIONAL STRAW VOTE HAS ROOSEVELT DOWN

Over 50% Votes Cast In National Poll Against New Deal

A final tabulation of 1,907,681 votes in the Literary Digest's poll on sentiment toward the New Deal indicated today that three-fifths of the voters disapprove President Roosevelt's policies.

The complete vote, announced in the magazine today, was:

Approving the New Deal — 712,368.

Disapproving—1,195,313.

The specific question the voters were asked to answer was:

"Do you now approve the acts and policies of the Roosevelt 'New Deal' to date?"

Utah and 11 southern and border states gave state majorities for the New Deal, while the other states voted against it.

In percentage, the complete vote was 37.34 per cent "yes," 62.66 per cent "No." Eighteen months ago, polling what the Literary Digest described as "almost the same list of names," the magazine found that 61.15 per cent of the voters approved the New Deal.

HALT DUMPING POOR EGGS INTO MICHIGAN

Recently Adopted Regulations Put Stop to Old Practice

Michigan has ceased to be the dumping ground for poor eggs shipped here from other states, Commissioner of Agriculture James F. Thomson announced today.

More than 500 dozen ungraded eggs from other states have been held up at the state border since Michigan egg grading regulations went into effect January 1, the commissioner said.

Surrounding states have strict grading regulations for eggs, and prior to now have been dumping off-grade eggs into Michigan.

Commissioner Thomson meanwhile is conducting an intensive egg grading educational campaign and hopes to have the industry in line for strict enforcement of the new rules by July 1.

CONSERVATION DEPT. ACQUIRES DEER YARD

Purchase 19,000-Acre Tract of Swamp West of Houghton Lake

State control of the Butterfield swamp in Missaukee and Roscommon counties, one of the finest deer-yarding areas in the Lower Peninsula, was assured at the January meeting of the State Conservation Commission at Lansing.

The Commission authorized purchase of approximately 19,000 acres of land in the two counties and in the heart of the Butterfield swamp near the north and west side of Houghton Lake.

In acquiring title to the land the state will gain control not only of desirable deer-yarding area, but also to approximately six miles of frontage on Denil stream, which flows through the swamp and is considered good trout water.

Secretary of State Announces There Will Be No Further Extension

A positive statement Saturday from Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, dimmed the hopes or delinquent motorists that the time in which they may drive under their 1935 automobile license plates will be extended beyond January 31.

"There will be no further period of grace for motorists who have not obtained their new plates," Atwood said. "My advice to those who have not applied for their new plates is to do so immediately to avoid the rush of the last few days."

Purchasing a new automobile or new livestock, remodeling or repairing homes, buying a new refrigerator, or refinancing a first mortgage are a few of the many purposes for which loans were made by this bank during the past year. We believe that a person with established credit rating should find it easy to borrow money for sound purposes. Through loans in 1935, we put a considerable sum of money to work in this community for the benefit of local individuals and firms.

FORD MOTOR CO. WILL DISTRIBUTE FARM ALMANAC AND FACT BOOK

Publication of a "Farm Almanac and Facts Book" which will be distributed to the rural population in all parts of the country is announced by the Ford Motor Company.

The book is of a convenient pocket size, containing 48 pages. It is unusual in makeup and content, presenting an extensive array of handy tables, statistics and charts for the assistance of the farmer and business man. Other sections are designed to aid the farm wife.

This first Ford Almanac is published for 1936 and is now being distributed. It carries a readily available calendar on the back cover and contains tables shewing the time of rise and set of sun and moon in all parts of the country every day of the year. Other helpful and interesting astrological and astronomical information is included.

Among the other prominent sections of the book are: A list of memorable historic events for each day of the year, facts about the universe, explanations of physical phenomena, a list of important festivals and anniversaries for the year, rules for foretelling weather conditions, population statistics, facts and records on farming as an industry, discussion of the farm of the future, information on citizenship and naturalization, a brief review of the history and development of the United States, "do's and don'ts" for use in emergencies, poisons and their antidotes, instructions for flower and vegetable gardening, crop seed sowing instructions, a list of places of interest to the tourist, parcel post rules and regulations, temperature and rainfall chart, dates of killing frosts in all parts of the country, and a table of distances between the principal cities of the country.

Stories on the founding and development of the Ford Motor Company and about the Ford Rouge Plant, word pictures of famous Edison Institute Museum and quaint Greenfield Village, established within a few miles of the Rouge Plant, are other features of the Ford Farm Almanac.

BOUNTY SYSTEM BEST AFTER YEAR'S TRIAL

Trappers Turned In More Pelts Than Under Previous System

The bounty system of predatory animal control cost Michigan $35,374.46 during 1935—the first year of its operation as successor to the state-paid trapper plan.

Contrary to earlier expectations this cost is more than $4,000 under the $40,000 set aside by state conservation authorities from game protection fund moneys at the beginning of 1935 to finance the bounty system.

When as many as 27 state trappers were employed at a salary of $125 a month each, the cost of predator control ran between $10,000 and $35,000 a year.

A comparison of catches made under the two systems, however, shows that the bounty system has produced the greater number of pelts. During 1935 bounty hunters were paid for 4,187 predator pelts, according to a report recently compiled at Lansing. Of this number 3,026 were coyote pelts, including 179 coyote pup pelts; 1,134 were bobcat pelts and 27 wolf pelts.

The highest annual take under the state trapper plan was in 1934 when a total of 1,274 pelts were reported.

In the take of wolf pelts only, the bounty plan failed to equal the average catch of wolves under the trapper system.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Sunday morning service, 10:45.

Meets first Wednesday evening each month at 7:45 p. m.

Reading room open Saturday, 3 to 5 p. m.

Sunday school, 12 o'clock.

We cordially invite the public to our service and reading room.

"Love" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, February 2.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (1 John 4:16): "And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 6): "'God is Love.' More than this we cannot ask, higher we cannot look, farther we cannot go."

Queer and almost unbelievable accidents that happened in 1935. Story after story that makes fiction seem dull. In The American Weekly, the magazine distributed with next Sunday's Chicago Herald and Examiner.

HIGH HEELS, POOR POSTURES COMPANIONS

Good Footwear Is Necessary to Good Health, Survey Discloses

High heeled shoes make for inferior body postures if worn for any length of time, a study conducted by the Home Economics Department at Michigan State College, East Lansing shows.

The study, conducted by Miss Julia Tear, revealed there is a definite relation between increased heel height and poor body posture. It indicated, too, that an inferior standard of posture was more evident when the heel height exceeded one and one-half inches than when low and medium heels were used.

Fashions in other types of clothing may be followed with no fear of injurious effects so far as health is concerned, but unfortunately, poorly shaped and poorly fitted shoes often bring about results that seriously affect one's health and comfort.

Miss Tear recently questioned 100 women and learned that 67 per cent admitted difficulty with their feet and that 65 per cent gave their shoes away before they were worn out. Some gave as many as 10 pairs of shoes away in one year, she added.

Comfortable shoes should have: adequate length from ball of foot to toe, ample width at the ball of the foot, room for fourth and fifth toes to extend forward normally, a flat inner sole without bumps and raises, and an inner line sufficiently straight to avoid lateral deviation of the great toe.

Some health and fashion hints in choosing shoes are:

Shoes should be comfortable as well as fashionable and good looking;

Shoes are a part of a costume and the color, design, and general type of the shoe should harmonize with the ensemble;

Simplicity of design in shoes is desirable because it is in better taste and also more economical in the long run;

Shoes receive hard wear and the kind and quality of the materials used in the shoe influence the general satisfaction from them.

MICHIGAN BELL REDUCING NIGHT PHONE RATE

Nation-Wide Cut Became Effective In Michigan January 15th

Extension to all day Sunday of the same reduced rates which have been in effect on long distance station-to-station telephone calls after 7 o'clock each night, and the establishment of reduced rates every night and Sunday on person-to-person calls, became effective January 15. These changes will mean a large annual saving to Michigan telephone users, according to C. L. Johnson, manager here for the Michigan Bell Telephone Company.

This additional discount in rates, which affects most calls between points on which the present station-to-station day rate is more than 35 cents, is the sixth major long distance telephone rate reduction offered by the Bell System since October, 1926.

This also is the first time that discounted rates have been offered on station-to-station day long distance calls on Sunday and the first that discounts ever have been established for person-to-person calls for any period. A person to-person long distance call is one on which the operator is requested to locate a particular person at the distant telephone, while a station-to-station call is one made to a telephone by number rather than to some person in particular. A station-to-station call requires less time for making the connection than does a person-to-person call and therefore the rate is considerably less.

As an instance of the savings made possible under the new schedule, Manager Johnson says that the day person-to-person rate from Charlevoix to Detroit heretofore has been $1.70 at all times. Now the same call can be made nights and Sundays for $1.10, a saving of 60 cents.

The week-end discount period on both types of long distance calls will extend from 7 o'clock Saturday nights until 4:30 o'clock Monday mornings.

When we see good in people they see good in us.

DELOUSE CATTLE BY USING POWDER

Farmers May Make Remedy; Poison Mixtures Should Be Avoided

When cattle rub against posts and buildings in winter, it is a pretty good indication they are suffering from an infestation of lice, says C. B. Dibble, of the Michigan State College entomology department.

Many inquiries have come to the animal husbandry department of the college, asking for ways of delousing. A bulletin on cattle lice may be obtained by writing to the college.

When fall control has been neglected and emergency measures are necessary in winter, louse powders are the only safe desirable control, the entomologist advises.

Commercial louse powders containing pyrethrum and derris, but without such poisonous materials as arsenic, fluorine, nicotine, or hellebore may be used.

A home made recipe, recommended by Mr. Dibble, would include one pound of pyrethrum, three pounds flour, and four pounds louse powder for a total cost of 60 cents, or 15 cents per pound.

One-fourth of a pound should be used per animal with the treatment repeated in 14 days. Bedding should be cleaned each time. If blue lice, which do not respond to this treatment, are present, six ounces of powdered naphthalene or moth balls should be added.

BEEKEEPER BUYS NINETY ACRE FARM IN ANTRIM COUNTY

Ira D. Bartlett, of East Jordan, well known beekeeper, has bought the last parcel of the former Bennett farm, three and one-half miles south of East Jordan, and will devote it to expansion of his honey production business.

Announcement of the sale came from William F. Johnson, secretary-treasurer of the Charlevoix County National Farm Loan Association, through which the sale was negotiated. Mr. Bartlett's purchase comprises 90 acres, all that remained in the hands of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, out of the 456 acres that at one time were included in the farm. Last year the bees in Mr. Bartlett's apiary produced 100,000 pounds of honey, net after being extracted. It is understood he plans to wreck the buildings that are now on this farm.

A year ago the land bank owned 102 more farms in Michigan than it owned at the end of the year, Mr. Johnson says. During the year 1935 it sold 281 farms in this state, largely through the National Farm Loan Associations.

Most of these farms were bought by local people, and most of the buyers were farmers who are making their homes on the farms purchased. Some bought land to add to that they already owned, as in the case of Mr. Bartlett, and there were some buyers from other states. A smaller proportion of the buyers of the past year have been city people who are getting out of the cities and into the country.

The sale in this instance was closed through the cooperation of R. C. Churchill, of Traverse City, who represents the land bank in this part of Michigan.

PLAN U. S. TREASURY OFFICE AT CHEBOYGAN

The Michigan Works Progress Administration is contemplating opening a brance treasury office in Cheboygan for disbursement of checks to WPA employes. At present, disbursements are handled from the Lansing office, and one of the purposes of opening the branch office would be to speed payments.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

LOWER FEED COST PROFITS DAIRIES

Records Kept Reveal Home-Grown Rations Increases Owners' Income

Decreased feed costs for Michigan dairies was reported for December by state cow testers, the report based on cost records.

A. C. Baltzer, extension dairyman at the Michigan State College, attributed the decline in feed costs to dependence on home grown feeds.

"The summaries of Michigan cow testers for December reveal a very high percentage of the dairymen depending largely on home-grown feeds," he said. "Little improvement has occurred in dairy herds where the feed is not home grown."

The report stated that cow testers inspected 1000 herds in all parts of the state and tested 14,000 cows for economical production.

Good sales of bulls from dairy association herds was also reported for December.

STATISTICS

The average consumption of beer in the United States for the year ending June 30, 1935, was 9.09 gallons per person, according to the Brewery Age.

The people of Wisconsin consumed 18.60 gallons per capita. Next to Wisconsin, the people of Michigan are the biggest beer drinkers in the nation, with an average of 18.43 gallons per person. As very many people do not drink, those who do must be consuming enormous quantities.

Beer is usually at least 4 per cent alcohol. It is therefore intoxicating and harmful, depending on the amount consumed.

CHAPTER XVI

her own being, her senses and soul responded to the sweeping first chords of passion. It was becoming increasingly difficult to think of Ruth as anyone's wife—much less the wife of tall, dark, handsome Larry, or as anyone's mother. It was incredible that there had been a child, a dark, handsome eager boy like his father—

"I Know, Ruth. But You Feel Sorry for Her Just the Same."

"I had no breakfast," Tony said, filling the gap. "So you may imagine how food smells to me. I've been at a drill club meeting all morning. The women are going after the wholesale markets down on Jackson and Washington streets, and they've gotten the Mayor interested. We're going in for it in a big way because the Examiner scooped us on that milk scandal, and we think—Fitch said so, anyway—that a lot of that properly belongs to them."

"How's Mr. Fitch's lady love?"

Never believe a thing true when money says it.

PUBLIC ENEMIES

There just isn't any excuse for the Wrong-Lane Turner!

He's the motorist who doesn't make up his mind that he's going to turn until after he's reached the intersection—and then suddenly attempts to cross in front of other moving cars. No warning signal—no brains!

Good drivers prepare for a turn in advance by getting in the left-lane of traffic for a left turn, and in the right lane for a right turn. Simple isn't it? Yet many accidents happen because motorists "forget."

"Hanging pruned. She hasn't written anything for months, but she's always trying to work up something. It's pitiful, I think," Tony said, warming to her subject. "Bess will try to get everyone enthusiastic about some picnic, or some party at the Press club or Solari's, and it's sickening to see that the boys don't warm up to it at all."

"It's horrible. But isn't it just what a woman like that ought to expect."

"I know, Ruth. But you feel sorry for her just the same."

"He doesn't pay attention to her any more?"

"He's got another one, Mae Muzzy," Tony said simply. "What makes me wild is to see Mae so sure of herself, typing away as if we could ever use a word the way she writes it, and having to consult with him every hour or so."

Ruth was not listening. Her alarmed eyes had crossed the big room; now she murmured in annoyance:

"Oh, heavens, did you ever know it to fail! There's Larry! Not a word about the birthday now, Tony! Who's with him?"

Larry had been about to seat himself at a near-by table; now he saw them and came smilingly over to stand with the proud air of an exhibitor beside the round-faced, squarely built, smiling, blond young man who was his companion. Ruth's short-sighted eyes blinked for a minute; then she half rose with a delighted cry.

"Joe! My dear! Joe Vanderwall! Where on earth did you come from?"

The newcomer stooped to kiss her; was presented to Tony. Tony saw pleasant blue eyes and liked the simple friendly smile. What was he—Danish, Norse?

"This is—what?" Ruth explained, her faded face a flush of excitement and satisfaction as they all took their places. "Joe, you're my half-brother's son—what does that make me? Step-aunt? Anyway," she said to Tony, "this is Mother's adored grandson, and Carrie's brother—you've heard us talk of Caroline?"

"I knew there were children, but I thought they were the sand box and romper size," Tony said. "I didn't know they were grown up. The picture of you, Doctor Vanderwall," she said to the man beside her, "is in uniform."

"Military prep school," he explained, his eyes drinking her in.

The room, that had seemed to rise and turn and waver as Larry came up, settled into place, and they were all easily talking together.

"This feller got in on a boat this morning," Larry said. "I tried to telephone you, tried to telephone your mother. No use. So I thought I'd take him to lunch and then try again."

"Well, Joe, you darling," Ruth kept saying happily. Her face was radiant. Tony furtively studied the nephew of whom she was evidently very fond and proud. He looked nice. Fair hair somewhat rumpled; fine big lean brown hands; age perhaps thirty. A doctor? Probably a surgeon. She gathered presently that he was interested in biologic research.

She had often heard the names "Big Joe" and "little Joe." Big Joe was Ruth's half-brother; Mrs. Patterson was very proud of him. He was a—what was it, an engineer of some sort? Anyway, they had always lived in East Africa, big Joe and his wife, and there were "children." Caroline was one of the children, evidently, and this nice Joe another. But somehow Tony had never connected the reputedly fascinating Carolines with the Joes; Ruth had so many relatives, and they were all vague and far away to Tony.

Ruth was immediately deep in hospitable plans. Joe must stay with them, of course, and she would get just a few nice people for a dinner that night. He had to dine with a scientist in Berkeley. Tomorrow night, then? Swell. And Tony, too? But Tony would have to run away to the Friday Night.

"What is the Friday Night?" asked Joe.

"A dance," Tony explained smiling.

"Could I go?"

"I could certainly get you a card for the dance," Ruth told him, "I'm one of their patronesses." But Tony goes—"

"As the social reporter of the Call," supplied Tony, as Ruth hesitated.

"Don't you like to dance?"

"I adore it. But there's a lot more to these dances than dancing."

"I'll bet there is, I'll bet there is!" Doctor Vanderwall agreed. "Ruth, she's grand!" he said delightedly of Tony, who laughed and flushed in a girl's pleasure at the immediate conquest. "Now what can we do to celebrate? I'll tell you what, Aunt Ruth, I'll eat the scientist, and you eat whatever you're doing tonight, and let's all go somewhere and dance."

"I couldn't, not Thursday," Tony said sinking her head.

"You seem to be a little inaccessible, Miss Taft. You don't seem to appreciate that I've come into your life. Don't you feel my nearness?"

"I can't say that I do—yet."

"Behave yourself, Joe," said Ruth, not quite pleased, despite her indulgent tone and smile. "I never heard you so foolish!"

"The bad news for Miss Taft is that I'm here for three years."

"Three years!"

"Yep. Hochenheimer foundation. Flora and fauna. I'm to have a lab down at Carmel-by-the-Sea, wherever that is!"

"Oh, it's a lovely place!" Tony said enthusiastically. "My sister lives at Monterey—at least," Tony amended, flushing and laughing, "she has since yesterday."

"Since yesterday! What is this—a joke?"

"No, seriously. She was married yesterday."

"You Taft girls seem to be going fast," said Joe.

"You must forgive him, Tony; he's quite crazy today!" Ruth apologized.

"No, I'm not, Aunt Ruth. But I'm excited. A week ago I was plugging away in Philadelphia as if nothing was ever going to happen in the world. Talmage was going to California—the old fellow had been planning for it for two years. The day before he was to leave what does his aunt in Kenkintown do but die and leave him and his mother a pot of money. Brauer sent for me, and I climbed on a train, and I haven't got my breath yet! This city," young Doctor Vanderwall went on enthusiastically, "I'm mad about it! The hills, the bay, ships, Chinese streets, mountains; I never saw anything like it in my life!"

Tony liked him; it was impossible not to like him; she was amazed to have Larry praise him quite extravagantly as he and she walked to the newspaper office together. For Larry had gotten to his feet and had said, "So must I," when Tony had said that she must go back to the office. She had been thinking all night that she would never see him again; that she never could look him in the face again, and now here they were walking along together in the most casual way imaginable. And again her heart was singing. The uninteresting downtown streets were thrilling with interest, and every big sidewalk window gave her back a satisfying reflection of a tall girl in smart dark blue, with touches of white on her hat and at her throat and wrists.

"Joe?" said Larry. "He's an extraordinary person. He's a freak."

"He doesn't seem exactly a freak."

"I tell you he is. He did phenomenal things in college. He took all the honors there were, went to Oxford, wrote a paper that excited the German botanists; he went over there and lectured to 'em in German."

"He couldn't. He doesn't look more than twenty-two with that round face and yellow hair!"

"He's nearly as old as I am. Three or four years younger. He's a darned important person. He'll be in charge of the Hochenheimer offices here. Everybody thinks he's a bull of fire."

"You can hardly believe it, he's so giddy," Tony murmured, as they entered the big newspaper building. Her mind was not on her words; she caught suddenly at Larry's arm. "Larry," she began a little thickly. "About yesterday—"

His quick intelligent look met hers. He did not speak.

"I'm terribly sorry I—I'm terribly sorry," Tony stumbled on. She stood close beside him in the dark downstairs hallway. "Larry, I've despised myself ever since—" she faltered. "I would have given anything, anything in this world not to have done that, not to have said that!"

"Then suppose we consider it as not having been said, not having been done, Tony?" the man suggested simply, after a little pause.

"If you could," she stammered, with the rich color rushing into her pale face.

"All right, then, it didn't happen!" he said. And Tony went on up to the city office in a very vertigo of joy, as happy today as she had been wretched yesterday. Two or three times, while she was ploughing gallantly through the scattered notes and pages that would somehow frame themselves into the sprightly social page of "Madame la Duchesse" next Sunday, she stopped and put her elbows on the desk and her face into her hands for sheer ecstasy.

She had no trouble getting her Sunday photographs now. Sometimes it amused her to remember with what a panic of apprehension she had once faced the necessity of getting them every week. It was all quite simple, when one knew how; and Tony did know how, now. She was in touch with all the good photographers; and whenever they could they helped her out, and whenever she could she gave them credit in the newspaper. When distinguished strangers came to town Tony called on them, asked quite frankly for photographs, and whenever any especially significant social gathering took place she went to it and took her cameraman along. Always, in her middle right desk drawer, there were ten or a dozen shiny prints in reserve. During the week she would make a selection from them and write the sentences that gave them their reason for appearing in her columns. These scraps of composition, with clippings from Eastern papers about Californians, notes from her own daily column, were all pasted together, and connected by chatty little phrases such as "Speaking of luncheons," or "By the way, Betty and Joan are both to be bridesmaids before they are brides."

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

Severe weather over much of the country has slowed shipments of perishable foods which will no doubt mean temporarily higher prices on fruits, vegetables and eggs. Fresh fish also will be somewhat less plentiful.

Canned foods are always seasonable and canned vegetables are apt to be somewhat cheaper than fresh in late winter and are equally healthful. The four favorite canned vegetables are tomatoes, corn, peas and stringless beans. All are available in two grades. Grade A are the best quality packed. Grade C are standard foods good for all general purposes, and very economical.

Here are three menus at different budget levels for Sunday dinners.

Low Cost Dinner

Braised Chuck Steak
Potatoes Onions Cole Slaw
Bread and Butter
Lemon Gelatin Custard Sauce
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

Braised Beef Potatoes
Onions Carrots
Bread and Butter
Orange Whip Custard Sauce
Tea or Coffee Milk

Very Special Dinner

Fruit Cup
Individual Chicken Pies
Chopped Spinach
Lettuce French Dressing
Rolls and Butter
Baked Creamed Custard
Coffee

DEPENDABLE

A survey contacting 5,000 persons representing 122 occupations in 22 states showed that 85 per cent considered statements made in newspaper advertising more reliable than those made by men elected to public office. Eighty-three per cent expressed more confidence in newspaper advertising than in salesmen's claims. A man may say a thing and then forget that he said it or claim he didn't say it. A thing published is not forgotten, and cannot be sidestepped. The newspaper can be identified and made responsible, and therefore it is deservedly the most reliable advertising medium in the world. No wonder the survey showed almost unanimous belief in the credibility of the newspaper.

Never a wrong that paid, nor one that didn't promise to pay.

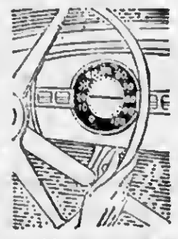
No. 5—DRIVING ON HILLS

In some parts of the country hills are taken for granted . . . and good steep ones, too. But for some of us who live in flatter country, hill driving is not so familiar.

As a matter of fact, there are several conditions peculiar to driving in very steep hills or mountains, especially if the altitude is high. For instance, a car that develops 100 horsepower at sea-level, has only 82 horsepower at an altitude of 5000 feet, and only 60 horsepower on top of Pike's Peak.

Another thing is that sometimes grades are deceptive and we don't realize how steep they are, if there is no level ground to judge by.

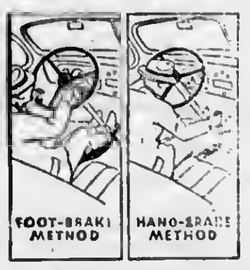
So if we go on a road trip and happen to get into country where hills are hills, we often have no idea of what is in store for us. Like as not, we will come rolling up to a hill, taking it for granted that we'll make the grade. But before we've gone very far we find that our power seems to be giving out, and we're slowing down. Then we realize we must shift to second gear, but we're lucky if we haven't found out so late that there we are stalled on a hill!



Now people who drive on hills all the time say one thing to remember is that there's nothing like a good start. Of course, this is true, because the minute we start up, gravity starts to work and work fast. Yard-by-yard it uses up our momentum till by-and-by that momentum is just about gone. Then we have to shift to a lower gear to increase our power.

Experts tell us that by far the most common fault in hill-climbing is failure to shift to a lower gear soon enough. So just to be sure, some drivers set a definite point at which to change gears. The consensus of opinion seems to be that we should always go into second gear as soon as our speed gets down to 20 miles an hour.

There are times, however, when we want to stop on a hill. So it's important to know how to start again, with our car on an upgrade. And there seem to be two methods used by experienced drivers.



Some use their foot brake to keep their car from rolling backward, put their engine in low gear and accelerate slowly with the hand throttle, gradually engaging their clutch and releasing the brake at the same time. Other good drivers do exactly the same thing, only they use the hand brake and the foot accelerator. But both groups tell us it doesn't make much difference . . . to use whichever method we happen to like the best.

Of course there aren't many hills that cars can't climb nowadays . . . and what goes up must come down. And that's where we have to look out for momentum. He may have been a friend in need when we were coming up hill, but going down he'll run away with us if we aren't careful. And if there are any sharp curves or any bad bumps or loose gravel, we have to be careful or he'll pitch us right off the road.

Many drivers say that we should go down a hill in the same gear we would use to get up. In other words, if it's steep enough so we would have to go up in second or even low gear, then we'd better get into that same gear before we start down. If our car is in second or low gear, our engine works as a very effective brake, and besides it saves a lot of wear on our real brakes.

Speaking of gears, experienced drivers say we should never, under any condition, disengage our clutch and coast down hill. That's just what momentum is waiting for. Just give momentum a free rein, without our engine to check it, and nobody can tell what's going to happen.

When we do get in country where people are used to driving on hills all the time, it may seem to us that they take those hills without the slightest concern. But if we were in their cars with them and could watch them closely, we would see that they take all these precautions we have mentioned, just as a matter of habit. And one thing is sure. They make it a rule never to pass other cars on hills, or get on the wrong side of the road, when they can't see far enough ahead to be sure whether anyone's coming.

WPA FUNDS RELEASED FOR SCHOOL PROJECT

A-G COOKING SCHOOL POSTPONED TO APRIL

Due to unfavorable weather conditions, the A-G cooking school, scheduled for last Friday afternoon at the Odd Fellow hall, was necessarily postponed. Martin Block, local A-G representative, stated the school would probably be held in April and that announcement of the date would be made later.

They say history repeats itself but its a safe guess it won't be an Indian who brings about Braddock's second defeat.

FEW REACTORS IN COUNTY'S CATTLE

TESTS FOR CONTAGIOUS ABORTION UNDER WAY

Veterinary Reports Less Than One Per Cent Reactors in Charlevoix County Herds

During the past several months veterinarians representing the Bureau of Animal Industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture have been testing dairy herds in Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego counties to determine if any cattle react to a blood test showing the presence of contagious abortion. Dr. C. G. Jensen, veterinary, is in charge of this work in Charlevoix county, and will continue this work through the winter and spring months.

Probably no disease of cattle is the cause of so much discouragement to stock owners in general as the one known as infectious or contagious abortion. It is a disease that is widely distributed throughout the world. How long it has been present in the United States is not definitely known, but probably it was here many years before its economic importance was recognized.

It has been determined that the act of abortion (giving birth to a calf before the full period of gestation has run) is merely one symptom or manifestation of the disease. Although this act of abortion is the most readily observed symptom of the disease, it has been noted also that in affected herds (1) sterility or barrenness is commonly more or less troublesome, (2) animals give birth to calves which, although living, may be too weak to resist some of the more common ailments, (3) cows show a tendence to retain their afterbirths, and (4) a reduced milk production is occasioned by the failure of animals to complete their normal gestation period.

In a letter from Dr. T. S. Rich, U. S. inspector in charge of Disease Eradication in Michigan, he states: "The supervision of dairy herds, as put on by the U. S. government relative to Bang's disease (contagious abortion), is conducted by the government without expense to the dairy owner. Furthermore, the government is to pay indemnity upon those that react to the federal test in addition to what the dairyman receives for salvage of the animal."

Dr. Rich further reports: "We are now working with a great many thousand herds, and are receiving new application agreements at the rate of about 1,000 per week. It is necessary that this work be done in an orderly and systematic manner and that these herds be taken in their order of application so far as is possible."

According to Dr. C. G. Jensen, the number of reactors in Charlevoix county to the blood test is less than one per cent, and the number of suspects ranges from seven to eight per cent.

STATE PLANTED 100 TONS OF BABY FISH LAST YEAR

More than 100 tons of baby fish were produced at the 14 state hatcheries and planted in the inland lakes and streams of the state during the past year to improve fishing.

State fisheries authorities at Lansing, who have just finished compiling the totals for 1935, have found that the year's planting in the inland waters is the heaviest since 1930. The number of fry and fingerlings planted amounted to approximately 106,170,000 and their aggregate weight was 206,506 paunds—or more than 103 tons.

TRAINS, HIGHWAYS BLOCKED BY STORM

MOST SEVERE WEATHER OF WINTER UNDER WAY

Highway Equipment Withheld Until Storm Subsides—School Attendance Affected in County

As this issue goes to press, Charlevoix is in the midst of one of the most severe winter storms experienced here in several years.

Railroad schedules over the Pere Marquette were abandoned Tuesday and Wednesday and, it is understood, the same condition exists with the Pennsylvania line from Grand Rapids to Mackinaw. Motor traffic, with the exception of within the city, is at a standstill.

Snowfall has been intermittent since a 10-inch fall Monday night. A heavy wind, shifting from southwest to northwest and accompanied by 10 below zero temperature, the lowest of the winter season, whipped the snow into huge drifts with the result highways have become completely blocked.

Snow plowing equipment, withdrawn from the highways late Tuesday nfternoon, has gone out only for emergencies and orders are to remain at the garage until the storm subsides.

Charlevoix schools had only a small percentage of total attendance Wednesday, especially in the lower grades, and in many instances rural schools have not operated since Monday.

The U. S. Coast Guard station has provided the following high and low temperatures for the period of January 29 to February 4, inclusive:

	High	Low
Wednesday	26	13
Thursday	22	10
Friday	21	—4
Saturday	13	4
Sunday	20	7
Monday	26	10
Tuesday	17	5

The mercury stood at 10 degrees below zero at the Coast Guard station Wednesday morning. Readings as low as 12 below were reported from other sections of the city.

KROGER MAINTAIN CAGE LEADERSHIP

HAVE A MARGIN OF THREE GAMES OVER RIVALS

Pirates Strengthen Lead In Baseball League—Reorganize Teams and Schedule Thursday Night

Monday night provided one of the closest nnd hardest-fought contests since the recrentional basketball league competition opened several weeks ago.

In an overtime contest, featured by close defensive play of both teams, Dahlquist's nipped the Wallace tossers by a 15 to 13 count. A goal in the overtime period provided the winning margin.

Krogers continue their lead in the basketball loop with a 30 to 19 victory over the Wallace "5," extending their wins to five, a margin of three games over their nearest rival.

Games scheduled for next week follow: Monday, February 10—8:15, Kroger vs. Wallace; 9:15, Dahlquist vs. A. & P. Wednesday, February 12—7:15, Wallace vs. Dahlquist.

The Pirates still hold first position in the baseball league, winning 16 to 4 from the Bronchos and 10 to 7 from the Eagles to extend their wins to five. The Lions trail in the percentage only by the loss of one more game than the Pirates. The Lions won 5 to 1 from the Giants and 13 to 7 from the Eagles to edge the latter tenm out of second place.

Following are the team standings:

	Won	Lost	Tied
Pirates	5	1	0
Lions	5	2	0
Eagles	3	3	1
Giants	1	3	2
Bronchos	0	5	1

No games have been scheduled for the coming week in the baseball league. It is planned, according to Director Ray Kipke, to reduce the league to four teams by dividing the Bronchos up among the other four outfits. The change will be made Thursday night and a new schedule of games arranged.

WPA SHORTENS WORK WEEK IN DISTRICTS

Charlevoix County Goes on Four-Day Schedule Thursday, February 6

Definite orders have been received by D. T. McHugh, district WPA director, to inaugurate a four-day week on projects in this district.

The new schedule took effect Monday morning in Emmet county and will be inaugurated Thursday, February 6, in Charlevoix, Antrim and Otsego counties.

Michigan, like other states, was included in the plan to reduce the hours of WPA projects from five days of seven hours each to four days of eight hours each, thus cutting the work a full day but reducing the weekly hours by only three.

The government theory behind this move is that men now employed on WPA projects would he given more time to seek steady employment.

ATWOOD EXTENDS LICENSE DEADLINE

MOTORISTS GIVEN TO MARCH 1 to BUY PLATES

Eleventh Hour Reprieve Given In View of 500,000 Failures to Purchase New Licenses

An eleventh hour reprieve for motorists who have not purchased 1936 license plates was granted Friday by Secretary of State Orville E. Atwood.

The deadline for operation of cars with 1935 permits was extended to March 1 by Atwood who said: "I do not want to lay up more than 500,000 automobiles which are unregistered. Such action would cost the state a heavy loss of gasoline tax revenue and work a hardship on many car owners."

In announcing the extension, under the discretionary power given the secretary of state, Atwood proposed that the next Legislature establish the mandatory deadline on April 1 with a provision that it shall be illegal for any agency to grant extensions.

In commenting on his announcement, Atwood said:

"The April date would aid many automobile owners. Under the present law they are harrassed by Christmas debts, winter hills and taxes, and many actually are unable to purchase plates for their cars. I believe that by giving them a full quarter of a year after the holiday and tax season they would be better situated financially to meet the cost of automobile licenses.

"I am forced this year to either give owners the maximum time allowed by the Legislature, or force a half million or more cars off the highways.

"Despite repeated warnings that I do not favor such extensions, many people of the state evidently remained in a frame of mind consistent with the broadest interpretation of the law which authorizes the secretary of state to extend the time limit to the last day in February. These people apparently will not be convinced that they must buy their license plates on any designated date as long as they know the law provides for an extension.

"Because of the implied intent of the statute, and because I am informed from reliable sources that many thousands of persons, including welfare workers who drive to their jobs, cannot raise the funds for licenses at this time, and for other reasons, I am extending the time for the legal use of 1935 license plates to February 29 which is the final date provided by law."

A Reunion and Surprise Party on Old Teacher

It was zero weather. The roads were blocked. The night was stormy. All plausible excuses for remaining within one's cozy shelter and around the family hearth. But these facts did not faze the crowd of old pupils on Beaver Island who had planned a "surprise" on their old teacher, Sister Mnry Robert.

Under the lendership of Andrew Gallagher, who planned and managed the surprise, the happy party of 20 or more trudged through the snow, some in cars, some in sleighs, and more on foot to pny tribute to one whom they had never forgotten.

And wns it ever a surprise! Those who nttended can tell the tnle. A very pleasant and social evening was spent, a delicious lunch brought by the crowd of mothers and daddies who now have children attending the various schools on the Island was served to all.

Upon the departure, a well-filled purse was presented by Lloyd McDonough in behalf of the nohle crowd, the proceeds of which will go to purchase a "chapel clock" in memory of the dear old boys and girls who haven't forgotten Sister, and their youthful dnys in St. James High school.

ELLSWORTH NEWS

Tony Shooks put up his ice for the summer last week. August VanDerArk is busy at it now.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Shooks are in Lansing. The play in which they take part won first prize in Gaylord at the potato show.

The state police were callers here Wednesday and Saturday. Our town must be getting on, for we have officers of the law here quite frequently.

Sorry we have no more news, but the weather has been so cold that hardly the usual visiting is going on, even the ground hog could not get through to see his shadow because of the snow. So maybe we'll have cold weather for more than the usual six weeks yet.

Survey On Rural Electrification Completed

After two months effort, all of the preliminary work of the rural electrification project has been completed. Over 500 numbers have been placed on the map of Charlevoix county, which show the names of those who have signed the survey sheets as being interested in securing the use of electricity.

Up to the present time the communities which have apparently signed up most completely are the US-31, Marion Center, Barnard Road, Beaver Island and Horton Bay. During Farmers' Week this material will be placed in the hands of the commitee in charge and it is hoped that in the near future some definite proposal that will be of mutual interest to both the utility company and the prospective customers will be presented.

While nohing definite can be announced at the time, it seems highly possible that some extensions may be made as a result of this activiy.

Club Leaders to Hold Important Conference

An event which promises to be of great value to the club leaders in the county is the annual club leaders' conference which will be held in the Marion Center Grange Hall on Wednesday night, February 12. A banquet will be enjoyed at 6:30 and will be served by the ladies of the Marion Center Grange.

The newly organized 4-H Club orchestra will make its first appearance before club leaders in the county at this time. All club leaders of winter club projects, and one club member from each group are invited to enjoy this banquet without cost, and to meet with our club representatives from the Michigan State College. Orville F. Walker, newly appointed district club agent, will take an active part in the development of plans for the club year.

We are glad to announce that at the present time there are 29 4-H Club groups actively engaged in project activity, with a membership of close to 300. It certainly looks like a banner club year, as this year's enrollment surpasses any previous year. All club leaders are urged and cordially invited to enjoy this attractive program that will be put on.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

10 Leading Causes of Death In Charlevoix County In 1935

As in previous years, heart disease again leads the list of causes of death not only in our district but in the United States. Following closely we find apoplexy, cancer, nephritis and violent and accidental deaths next in importance. The majority of these deaths including heart disease, cancer, nephritis and apoplexy occurred in the age group of 60 to 85 years. It is during this period of declining years in one's life that the vital processes tend to diminish in power making it necessary for the adult to engage in only the mildest form of activity.

The following table prepared by the District Health Department, composed of the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego, shows the 10 leading causes of death that occurred in Charlevoix county in 1935:

Heart Disease	48
Apoplexy	17
Cancer	14
Nephritis	12
Violent and Accidental	9
Pneumonia	5
Premature Birth	5
Other Dis. of Circ. System	5
Influenza	3
Anemia	3

There were no deaths resulting from scarlet fever, whooping cough, typhoid fever, smallpox, measles or diphtheria in Charlevoix county during 1935. There was one death resulting from infantile paralysis.

Preventive medicine has succeeded in controlling or eliminating such pests as smallpox, tuhereulosis; malaria, yellow fever, typhoid and diphtheria, and has so prolonged life that more and more persons are living through the middle age and beyond.

Ford Builds 'High Wheeler' for Difficult Roads

A FORD V-8 "HIGH WHEELER" for use in rural districts where exceptional road clearance is needed is now being produced by the Ford Motor Company. The car is equipped with 18-inch steel spoke wheels and 6.00 by 18 4-ply tires, instead of the 16-inch drawn steel wheels and 6.00 by 16 tires which are standard on the 1936 model. The additional road clearance enables the "high wheeler" to negotiate roads with deep ruts and trails with high spots such as stones and stumps. The view at right shows the standard wheel in front, with the new "high wheel" behind.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

Auto Tag Deadline Delay Widespread

Michigan, rnther than being alone with an extended final date for purchase of 1936 automobile license plates, oined mjany other states when the deadline was recently extended to February 29 by Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state.

Not many states have extended their dates so late as the one effective in Michigan; in some states the normal deadline is earlier than the one provided by law in this tate.

While adjoining Indiana granted no extension from its December 31 date, so far as official notification in Lansing is concerned, Ohio's Legislature recently moved the final date for plate purchases to April 1. Illinois granted a 30 day extension.

The bordering Canndian province of Ontnrio extended its deadline 30 days, with February 1 the finnl date, according to lntest official information there. Several states extended their final plate purchase dates 45 days.

Among stntes granting periods of grace are Iowa, Kansns and Wisconsin. Louisiana extended its date from December 1 to February 5, a 65 day added period; Maine gave its car owners an netual Christmas present by extending the time from December 25 to March 1.

Minnesota moved its deadline back 90 days, from December 31 to April 1. North Dakotn led the parade by extending its deadline from December 31 to May 16, a deferment of about 136 days as compared with Michigan's 60 days. The three Pacific Coast states mnde no concessions to their cnr owners, but delays aro spotted throughout the nation's map. Wyoming with 60 days aad Oklahomn with 90 days being among those where delays were secured.

Michigan residents are warned by Mr. Atwood not to drive outside of the state without their 1936 license plates as it is possible they might encounter some difficulty with tho authorities of the other states.

Scientists have estimated that oae female smelt of approximately seven inches in length will produce and cnrry as many as 25,000 eggs.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

It was hack work now. Now nnd then she had to stny very late for one cause or nnother, stay after most of the men had drifted away at midnight, until Frank Fitch's office wns dark, and only two or three of the city room reporters remained, and faithful Ingersoll wns at the Associated Press desk, and drunken Goldberg was the night editor. Tony always found this experience thrilling; she felt her hair getting fuzzy and her face hot; an utter weariness of wnrds would possess her, yet it wns a wonderful thing to be a part of the nld paper, nnd have one's share in putting it "to bed."

In and out of the big hotels, meeting ministers and nmbassadors on their way to and from the Orient, and writers snd nctresses and film folk, in and out of the city hall, getting to know the mayor, meeting the governor, known to the presidents of the clubs, Miss Tnft went her tireless nnd busy way. All June was busy with Commencement exercises, and the latter hnlf of December was filled with Yuletide cheer. Youngstera were coming hnme from Eastern schools, every club had a dinner or a tree, Tony, violets on her shoulder, her cheeks rosy in the cold atr, played her own part in all their lives.

"You're so sure of yourself!" Brenda said admiringly. "You're different. I hardly know you, Tony."

"You're never sure of yourself in the newspaper game, Bendy. Anyone may be out, nnd anyone may be in, at a moment's notice."

"You don't have to worry!" Brenda said in fond pride. She stood with her back to the microscopic sink she had just reduced to immaculate cleanness and smiled at her sister.

A banker's convention wns meeting nt Del Monte, near Monterey, nnd Tony had been sent down to cover the feminine interest of the occasion. She and Brenda could be together for long quiet hours during the three days, for the lousy times for Tony were in the late afternoon snd evening, when the bankers came in from meetings or golf, and social activities began.

Brenda's small domain was one of the least expensive spartments. But Tony somehow found the little Atwater home touching and charming.

For one thing Brenda loved every inch of it with an almost solemn devotion. Her idolatry of Alvin included everything that concerned him. Quite simply, nnd without npology, Brenda put Alvin's lightest wish nbove all other considerations and obligations. Aunt Meg was not to come down and visit them because "my dear, he says old ladies get him nervous." Brenda was not going to a hospital in July; "Oh, it just costs money, snd you have to have nurses, nnd their meals, and I can get some good old Mexican woman in and have it without the slightest trouble here. Alvin worries so nbout money, and t don't want this baby of mine to begin by burdening him."

"We'll all adore it!" Tony said, nnd Brenda, smiling nt her with a face already a little drawn and pale, said gratefully, "Ah, t love you for saying that, Tony."

In these days Tony felt much older than Brenda. Her life moved in wider channels than the peaceful ones that Brenda knew now; the cheerful buying of half a pound of butter, half a dozen eggs, the thrifty hoarding of the cut lemon, the cut onion. Brenda's evenings were spent talking with Alvin, listening to the radio, working ont the crossword puzzle in the evening paper.

The older sister's complete nbsorption in her new role made Tony feel oddly lonely. She had no part in Brenda's life now, much as they loved each other, much as they lived to be together. Brenda was only a background for Alvin, and Alvin felt for his handsome, successful young sister-in-law only the rather nervous liking of a busy and worried young doctor toward the person closest, after himself, to his wife. Tony was smartly dressed, successful; perhaps Alvin Atwater was a little more conscious of Brenda's tiredness and paleness, the flatness of Brenda's purse, the inevitability of dishwashing and bedmaking for Brenda, when Tony was by.

On a hot February day, the last of the convention, they took their lunch down to the shore of Pebble Beach and lny talking on a warm strip of snnd that lny between the rocks.

"You go up tonight, Tony? Ah, it's been so delicious having you, even for this long," Brenda said. "You've done me—I can't tell you how much good! I was sort of dragging about, and I didn't seem to have any ambition about Iago's clothes, nnd you've braced me so wonderfully. I knew you would! And tell Cliff, and tell darling Annt Meg—"

She was full of messages for them all. Bnt Tony knew that she and Alvin only nsked of them, just now, to be let alone. They had lost Bendy for a while; they were all eclipsed by the figure of Alvin, that she would come back.

"Oh, my dear, we forgot to look up Doctor Vanderwnll at Carmel!" she exclnimed suddenly.

"We could do it this afternoon!" Brenda said, stricken.

"We could not. This is too nice!" But after a moment Tony reconsidered it. "Perhaps I should," she said reluctantly. "Ruth is sure to feel hurt if I don't!"

CHAPTER XVII

They had nad their lunch now, and the little basket that bad held eggs nod cookies and lettnce asndwiches wns empty. The sun was beating down steadily; there waa sheller, down here in this little ingle of beach, nnd a sense of security and protection.

Brenda said on a long yawn: "Let's do it; let's be decent. We can go home by way of Carmel and look him up."

"All right." Tony dropped her head on her arms agnin.

"Does he like you?"

"Madly. If we find him at home you'll see.'

"Well," Brenda protested laughing, pleased with the iden, "he probably doesn't display it in company."

"Oh, but that's just what he does."

"Had he asked you?"

Brenda asked it a little self-consciously, nnd Tony, looking up quickly, laughed with a suddenly flushed face.

"He—peatedly. In company nnd out. Always."

"And you don't like him?"

"I admire him enormously. I think he's splendid. He's tall and fair and full of fun—he's nice."

"Not reliable?"

"As reliable as death! He's young," Tony said. "Bnt he's going to be one of our Best Knowu Americans—with capitals, Bendy."

"Then, why? No money."

"As a matter of fact, he has money. After he'd sent me enough violets nnd orchids to sink the firemen, I asked Ruth. He's rich. At least, to our way of thinking he is."

"Does he know you're down here?"

"I'm not sure. He goes skimming about from Montana to Laguna—hunting rock parasites, I believe it is. He sent me a frightful English magazine with an article in it about the parasites nf Kennebunkport or something."

Brenda was silent for a long while. Then she said simply:

"You're not happy, are you, Tony?"

"I ought to be," Tony temporized. "I try to be. Sometimes, when I look back on the old days," she said, "and remember how young we were, and how poor we were, and yet how we used to laugh and carry on and sing—"

"It seems so contrary; it's just life, I suppose," she added as Brenda, watching her intently, did not speak.

"Tony, may I ask you something?"

"Ask away, Bendy."

"Is it Barney?"

For a minute Tony stared at her sister in amazement; then her color came rushing back, and she burst into laughter.

"Barney Kerr! Good heavens!"

"Well, Cliff said he heard he was going to be married."

"And so he is, and the girl hates me as the siren who wrecked his life nnd broke his heart. Poor simp," Tony said amusedly, looking very handsome in her thin white frock, with a white hat on her dark hair, and her skin all the browner by contrast. "She'll spoil the life out of him. And she has money, nnd that's what his mother wanted. He'll be all right!"

"Then if it isn't Barney, who is it? It isn't this doctor," Brenda mused. Tony was silent for a space lying facing her sister with her elbows planted in the sand, and her chin in her palms.

"Is it who I think it is, Tony?" Brenda said, very low.

"I guess so."

Brenda was silent for a while. Then she said:

"Does he know?"

"Yep," Tony answered briefly.

"Tony, she doesn't know!"

"Of, nf course not, of course not," Tony said impatiently. "There's nothing to know, nnyway. I broke down—the night you were married. It happened to be, and blubbered out something—I don't know what, and a day or two later he said we would act as if it had never been—and that's all there is to it!"

"You mean," Brenda said, troubled, "that he pretended—tried to pretend that there was nothing to it, that you must just forget it?"

"What else, in heaven's name, could he dn?" Tony's tone was one of lifeless patience.

Brenda was silent; watching and pondering.

"I think you're being a tremendous sport."

"I'm trying to be. Noblesse oblige something, I suppose," Tony said, in a bored voice. "No girl has a right to like a married man, and if she does, the sooner she gets out the better."

"You don't go to their house any more?"

"Now snd then. But I don't often see him there."

"But then—" Brenda began, with an eloquent spread of her hands. "What's going to happen?"

"Nothing," Tony answered briefly. She got up, and took the basket, and walked toward the car. Brenda followed her; spoke again timidly.

"Does it—it must!—get easier?"

"No," Tony said. "It'll never get easier. I'll never get over it."

They drove for a while in silence.

"Where you going, Bendy?"

"Well, aren't we going down to see Doctor Vanderwall's place?"

"Oh, I forgot. Isn't it pretty late?"

Brenda answered the question with another.

"You really don't like him, do you? —Here he is!"

Here he was, in the busy little straggling main street of Carmel; his big arms full of bundles from the grocery, his round fair face shining with pleasure in the full light of the descending sun. Brenda saw him fumble his purchases into his own parked

SMALLER POTATO STOCK IN STATE THIS WINTER

The merchantable stocks of potatoes held by growers and local dealers and buyers in Michigan on January I was estimated at 8,849,000 bushels as compared with 14,905,000 one year ago and 7,338,000 two years ago.

This represents 59 per cent of the portion of the 1935 crop that has been sold or available for sale but is only 35.4 per cent of the total crop grown last year. Approximately 37 per cent of the total crop will remain on the farms where grown. This amount represents loss from shrinkage, food and seed requirements, nnd the cull stock unfit for food, seed, or sale.

MICHIGAN LEADS NATION TREE PLANTINGS

Total of 104,000,000 Seedlings in 1935 Gives State First Place

From third place in 1934, the state jumped to the top in 1935 with a planting of 112,000,000 pine seedling trees. Of this total 104,000,000 plantings went in national forests and the remainder in state forests and on private lands.

Wisconsin is second in the nation for 1935 with a total planting of 55,522,000 trees of which 43,000,000 were on state lands.

New York is in third place with 52,743,000 plantings, 42,000,000 on state lands, and Indiana fourth with plantings of 32,381,800 trees. Minnesota ranked fifth with 25,502,000.

The total planting for the nation was 501,789,763 and sets an all-time high record.

BATTLE AGAINST DUST IS OUTLINED FOR 1936

State Highway Department Program Includes 3,772 Miles Gravel

Although Michigan roads are now blanketed with snow, the State Highway Department today completed plans for a dust laying program next summer.

All but 140 miles of gravel roads in the state trunkline system will be included in the 1936 program under the department's maintenance budget recently approved by the State Administrative Board.

The inclusion of an additional 100 miles of roads in the dust laying program this year will cost $31,114. This extended program is necessitated by new construction and increased use of some routes. The total cost of dust laying will be $767,528 for 3,772 miles. Last year 3,672 miles were treated at a cost of $736,414.

Menus for Lincoln's Birthday

February is so chock full of days and birthdays to celebrate—and is so plastered with hearts and hatchets that I hardly know where to start. As the 12th of this month is Lincoln's birthday, I think it would be fun to plan a special menu for this date. In our home, even though we're not having guests in, the children enjoy it so much that we always observe dates such as this with a special menu. The food will, of course, be simple—something they would serve in the backwoods, for Lincoln's life certainly typified simplicity and economy. I'm giving you two suggested menus. They would be grand for a good old-fashioned party—or for your family dinner at home:

MENU NO. I
Baked Beans
(In old-fashinned bean pot)
Whole Wheat and Raisin Breads

Cole Slaw
(In wooden chopping bowl)

FOR TEMPERANCE

The General Council of the Congregational and Christinn Churches makes an interesting contribution to the campaign of temperance education by bringing out a textbook for use in the denomination's Sunday schools, where 734,146 students are enrolled. Systematic study of the social and individual problems presented by the use of alcohol is to be recommended so that the church may play its part in moulding public opinion on the subject.

Undue reliance on the power of law to promote the cause of temperance was admitted and deplored by the dry forces of the country as public support of nntlonal prohibition faded. The drys of all shndes are now enlisted in a new campaign. Some are still nvowed prohibitionists, who recognize that any prohibitory law, to be effective, must be backed up by public sentiment. Others belleve that society's policy as to regulation of the traffic must be formed after closer study of the problem and in the light of the experience with the various methods now being tested out. But there is no disagreement about the primary need of the campaign of education.

The churches will always stress the moral aspect of the alcoholic problem, in the deleterious effects of the habit on character and will. But there are many other sides to the subject considered a social problem which ought to be examined. The church is not stepping out of its province by supplementing the moral appeal by their study.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

RECOVERY

Three major factors will probably determine the course of general business activity in 1936. We cannot measure their relative importance, nor do we know how their influences may shift. We do know that business is getting off to a good start in the new year. The first of these major factors consists of the natural forces of recovery. People are replacing goods in which shortages had developed earlier in the depression, and this results in greater production of both durable goods and consumers' goods. We are making more automobiles, and constructing more new homes, and building more machine tools. Morcover we have had a great increase in the production of woolen fabrics, and a considerable one in the output of shoes. These are examples of the natural forces of recovery.

The second controlling factor is the subsidy that recovery is receiving from emergency expenditures of government. It seems probable that this great stimulus will continue as a sustaining support of recovery in 1936. It has contributed to the increased purchasing power of the agricultural districts, and strongly influences the demand for automobiles. Its force is noteworthy in the case of building contracts which were higher in the first half of December than in any other half month in almost five years, but which mostly consisted of public works' contracts placed before the December 15 deadline in order to obtain federal aid.

The third factor is the relationship between business and government, and here the possibilities are less auspicious than could be wished. We have ahead a political campaign in which most of the issues will be questions of economics, while most of the urguments will be appeals to emotion. It seems unlikely that the underlying struggle between agrarianism and industrialism will be given recognition. If the Congress, the campaign, the pending investigations, and the Supreme Court do not inject new and serious uncertainties into the conditions under which business must be conducted, this third factor will probably not assume large importance. If this turns out to be the case, and if no important war brenks out, the controlling factors in continuing recovery promise to be the natural forces of expansion and the artificial ones of subsidy.—From the Cleveland Trust Company Business Bulletin.

SEEKING THE TRUTH

We have refrained from extending comment on the Townsend Old Age Revolving Pension Plan up to now, because we have considered it our duty to thoroughly study the question before presuming to discuss it. We have seen more "hoocy" in print both for nnd against the Townsend Plan than any one subject we can recall since prohibition ceased to be a burning national issue.

Even now, we will not attempt to dispose of this question with a snap of the fingers and the flat declaration of our verdict, be it "yes" or "no." It is our observation that no issue which has as wide an appeal to the public as the Townsend Plan and which faces such determined opposition can ever be said in fairness to be all wrong, nor, for that matter, as good as its advocates allege it to be.

As a matter of fact the Townsendites should be the first to recognize this principle. If they are as sincere as we believe them to be in their desire to improve the conditions of the American people, and especially of the aged, it is inevitable that they will have allowed in advance for the eventuul compromise which almost always precedes the passage of legislation on such highly controversial subjects. Somewhere short of a one hundred per cent achievement there must be a point which, if attained, would be admitted to constitute a satisfactory fulfillment of their aims.

We do not expect those in favor of the Townsend plun to admit this publicly so early in their campaign, any more than we expected the school lobby to admit last yeur that the schools of Michigan could get along on less than $25,000,000 of new school aid. Neither do we expect the arch-opponents of the Townsend plan to ndmit that it has any good qualities worth mentioning.

Both sides, it seems to us, are busily engaged in befogging the maojr issuc with various and sundry side-issues and appeals to prejudice, all of which represent the political equivalent of the first skirmishes between two military forces, each side cautiously feeling out the other and each attempting to shelter its own vital units from direct attack.

Our first conclusion, therefore, is that the bulk of the words now being spoken and written about the Townsend plan, both "pro" and "con" are to a large extent exactly what each side says the other side's argument amounts to, namely, "bunk."

The country has witnessed both poverty and prosperity without the Townsend plan, and the world at large has seen both content and discontent under every economic order that has been seriously tried out. History does not support the belief that any one plan is a cure-all for economic disorders. Neither does it lead to the conclusion that when some one advances an idea for a change we should necessarily close our ears and refuse to listen. All worldly progress has been made by the adoption of the workable portions of new ideas and their incorporation into our social and economic structure.

WOMEN AT THE BAR

"The saloon was had enough before women moved in to make it worse," avers Arthur Brisbane, a newspuper editor and columnist, anent the drive in St. Louis to exclude women drinkers from the bar. And though Mr. Brisbane has never allied himself with the dry forces, he has this to say of women drinking—at any rate in public places: "Prize fights, cock fights, regulnr snloon bars should put up the sign 'Ladies NOT Invited.' In former days, each child had at least half u chance, because the mother behaved, even if the father did not. That half a chance should be preserved."

—Press Director W.C.T.U.

IT WON'T SUCCEED

Having practical cnntrol through a licensing system of the telegrnph, telephone, cable and radio, Washington bureaucracy now proposes to bring the newspapers of the nntion under subservient regulation through the medium of a law cleverly disguised as truth in advertising. Under such a law the postmaster general would be empowered to bar from the mails all publications containing matter in its advertising columns which he might deem improper, and from which there would be no appeal. Shorn of their advertising revenues thousands of newspapers in the United States would be forced to suspend publication. Of course the postmaster general would be supposed to get a headache because of sympathy for the publisher when that happened. We wonder how much longer the American people are going to tolerate a set of political bureaucrats in Washington who are continually seeking to limit the freedom of a people? Balked by the Supreme Court from foreing uneonstitutional government upon the people, we find them starting a campaign for constitutional revision. Prevented in the early days of the New Deal from gaining n licensing power over the press, they are now traveling in new channels to obtain their objective. No wonder they are heginning to be looked upon with suspicion despite their repeated declarations of patriotism. When the freedom of the press is destroyed democracy dies. It should be preserved above all other safeguards of representative government.

Frank F. Bird, Floyd Bartholomew, Eugene Stroud and Elliott Lewis attended a dinner party given Saturday evening at Boyne City in honor of James Dilworth, an Odd Fellow 56 years and only living charter member of Pine Lake Lodge No. 285, at Horton Bay. Members of the Horton Bay lodge, with which Mr. Dilworth has been affiliated 48 years, also were in attendance. Mr. Dilworth, one of Charlevoix county's pioneers, related some of his early experiences which included walking from six to eight miles in winter to attend lodge, also the fact that he was one of the first to ship lumber by boat on Pine Lake (now Lake Charlevoix). The occasion was a very enjoyable one.

"I Live for Love," Warner Bros.' gay comedy-romance, is scheduled as the feature attraction at the Palace Theatre on Saturday and Sunday, February 8-9, with Dolores Del Rio and Everett Marshall, the great operatic star, in the stellar roles.

The plot is said to carry a most unusual comedy twist, set against the background of a radio broadcasting station.

"Home Girls" Have Chance In Pictures

Girls of a definitely old-fashioned temperament, in that they shun party life and so-called sophisticated living, need have no fears over their chances of success on the screen, in the opinion of William LeBaron, famous Paramount producer.

LeBaron points to Eleanore Whitney, 18-year-old dancer, as a case in point. She is currently featured in Paramount's "Millions in the Air," a radio amateur-hour farce which opens on Saturday, February 8, at the Palace Theatre.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

February 9: This is "Lincoln Day" in our church. Instead of the usual sermon, by special request Dr. McMillan will repeat the "Personal Career of Lincoln," which he recently gave before the Kiwanis Club. The address was full of "human interest" features, and gave many details of Lincoln's life that are quite generally unknown, and was very fine in its appeal to the high idealism that seemed to be the motivating principle of his life.

Floyd Supp will speak at 6 o'clock before the Youth Movement on "Playing the Game As a Lawyer Sees It." The older people are invited, and the church chapel should be filled.

The Club meets this week with Mrs. Henry Jacobs and Mrs. Walter Taylor as hostesses, in the home of Mrs. Taylor on South Bridge street.

Because of the severe storm, the Sunday school supper and the Missionary Society were postponed.

There Is No Other Way

In supplying telephone service to Michigan, this Company's first concern is with the present. Above all else, the service must be good today. But to serve the present, we must be constantly preparing for the future.

To illustrate: In Detroit stands Michigan's largest long distance switchboard. It represents invested money, skilled labor and thorough engineering study. The need for this switchboard did not exist at the time plans were made for it. But a careful survey of the future had plainly indicated that such a need was coming. And when it came, this Company was perfectly equipped to handle the heavy traffic of long distance calls that flowed in and out of Michigan's great industrial areas.

The intricate mechanism behind your telephone cannot be assembled overnight, nor thrown together to meet a sudden need. It must be "built ahead." To do this intelligently—and economically—requires an intensive engineering survey of such factors as shifts in population, industrial developments and trends in real estate. The neglect of these preparations could be as wasteful as building a bridge accommodating a single lane of traffic, only to find later that additional lanes are imperative.

It is not a mere academic theory that this policy of building for the future is the only way to provide high-grade telephone service. Experience has repeatedly demonstrated that there is no other way.

POULTRY

QUIT CONFINEMENT IDEA FOR PULLETS

Raising on Range Is Best, Poultrymen Say.

Raising of pullets in close confinement, a method recently tried by leading Ohio poultry men, is now largely a discarded system. The swing is toward the former method of growing pullets on good range.

Experience has shown that birds raised on range are better feathered and more likely to produce well during the fall and winter months, according to Poultry Pointers, published monthly by the department of poultry husbandry, the Ohio State university.

Another practice urged by the publication calls for the separation of the older birds from the pullets. When old and young birds occupy the same range the hens are a source of infection of coccidiosis, tuberculosis, cholera, and other diseases, as well as for infestations of intestinal parasites.

Rotation of range, one year with another, is recommended. Old range is a source of worm infestation. "Worm pills in the fall are a poor substitute for prevention," states the publication.

Feeders and waterers should be moved every few days to prevent contamination of the range and killing of the grass.

"Poultry men hold the belief," reads the publication, "that if pullets are fed a ration that is too high in protein they will begin laying before they attain a proper weight. As a result, eggs will be small and it will be difficult to maintain production without a fall molt. On the other hand, experiments have shown that if the protein content is limited too much, the pullets will be stunted.

"A very satisfactory method of feeding is to continue the birds on the mash ration on which they are started and supplement with hopper feeding of grain from the time they are six to eight weeks old until maturity. For this purpose it is more desirable to feed a grain mixture than to use corn alone."

Eggs in Storage "Eat" Themselves, Tests Show

An egg deteriorates in storage because it is digesting itself. Work by food chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture shows that trypsin, one of the enzymes present in the pancreatic juice of the human body, is present in egg white and is quite probably responsible for the changes that occur in eggs when they are stored for several months. The function of trypsin in the human body is to digest protein foods. Presumably that is just what it does in the egg white.

For years scientists have suspected that trypsin or some other proteolytic enzyme was responsible for two of the important changes that take place under storage—a weakening of the membrane around the yolk, causing it to break more easily, and an increase in the amount of thin white.

As a check on their conclusions the investigators took a fresh egg, punched a small hole in the end and injected trypsin into the thick white with a hypodermic needle. Fresh eggs so treated took on in a few hours the characteristics of eggs held in storage for many months. The whites became thin and watery and the yolks became fragile. Within two days it was almost impossible to break the egg without breaking the yolk.

Thin Shelled Eggs

In the summer time eggs often become thin-shelled. When the birds are going out of production there is a tendency for a lack of calcification of the shell. There is nothing to be done in this case except to collect the eggs several times a day, which will save them from being broken in the nest. There is a possibility, however, that the birds are not receiving sufficient calcium. This should be supplied by having oyster shell or ground limestone available for the birds at all times. A careful check of the flock will indicate whether the birds are going out of production or whether there is a deficiency in calcium.

Poultry Squibs

Gather eggs at least twice a day and cool them before packing.

• • •

The total chicken population of the country is approximately 400,000,000.

• • •

A goose in Downpatrick, Ireland, recently laid an egg weighing one pound.

• • •

In the aggregate, 760 eggs are laid every second by the hens in the United States.

• • •

Two pounds of wheat have about as much value in the poultry ration as a pound of bran and a pound of flour middlings.

• • •

A total of 311 eggs in 50 weeks is the record of a New Hampshire red pullet owned by E. N. Larrabee of Peterborough N. H.

• • •

If hens start feather pulling or egg eating and the flock management seems all right, the best remedy is to turn them on range, even if the weather is not ideal.

DAIRY FACTS

COW'S FUTURE IN HER HEIFER DAYS

Development Then of High Importance.

Well-grown heifers can act their age when they join the milking herd and start to pay profits. S. H. Work of the New York State College of Agriculture cites the example of Tidy, a cow used in the protein experiment herd at the college, bought four years ago as a five-year-old.

Tidy, he says, was thin and had never had her full growth. The first year her high day's milking was 50 pounds of milk. She was fed well during the first dry period, and in other dry periods, so that she gained about 250 pounds in weight. The second year her high day's milking was 60 pounds, and this year, as a nine-year-old, her high day's milking was 90 pounds.

Tidy's case shows that it is important to develop heifers when they are young if great cows are desired when they freshen. The first four years in the experimental herd should have been Tidy's best years if she had been well grown and fully developed, Mr. Work points out.

Occasional Stirring of Milk in Can Advisable

It is much more difficult to reduce the temperature of the creamy layer of milk in the top of a milk can than that in the bottom, and yet it is the top layer that needs the most rapid cooling. The cooling of a can of milk, set in a tank of water, proceeds as follows: The warmer milk in the can that is being cooled, because it is lighter, rises to the top along with the fat globules of cream. For the same reason, the warmer water next to the can rises to the top.

As the warmer milk rises, it picks up bacteria, so that the top layer soon contains a higher bacterial count than the lower layers. And when a can of milk at 95 degrees F. is put in water at 50 degrees, the water close to the can at once starts rising toward the top, where it tends to spread over the surface. This layer increases until in half an hour a layer 2 inches deep will be found to be from 10 to 15 degrees warmer than the water at the bottom. This explains why the layer of milk and cream at the top not only contains a larger proportion of bacteria than the lower layers, but also why it is the most difficult to cool. It further explains why the occasional stirring of milk in the can, as well as water in the tank, when the can is first placed therein, brings about more rapid cooling of the milk.—Wallaces Farmer.

Feeding Shock Fodder

Shock fodder late in the season is not as palatable, nor will it be eaten with as little loss as fodder which has just been harvested. The palatability of fodder in the spring can be greatly improved, however, by grinding and mixing the ground fodder with the grain ration or with ground hay.

At the South Dakota experiment station, bundle corn stover was fed to dairy cattle and it was found that 36 per cent of this feed was refused by the cows and was wasted. When the corn stover was ground for these cows, they ate it with no waste whatever. Even for fattening steers, fodder can be fed with good results if it is ground and fed mixed with the grain ration.

At this time of the year, there is still shock fodder in the fields. None of this feed need be wasted. If it is made more palatable, it will be consumed by cattle with no waste whatever and can be of much value in helping the hay to last until pastures are ready.—Exchange.

Drinking Cups; More Milk

Oscar Hammer, Dakota county, Minnesota, has found that drinking cups in his barn have not only saved a lot of work, but have also greatly increased the milk production of his herd. Within two weeks in early spring this had amounted to 15 gallons each day for the herd of 25 cows, as compared to the previous yield. He has observed that cows, like people, drink more often when the supply is convenient, particularly when eating. At least four pounds of water are required for each pound of milk produced so that any increase in consumption of water is usually followed by correspondingly larger yields such as reported by Mr. Hammer. He has also recently installed a milking machine with which he can milk the cows in about an hour and ten minutes, which is a great saving in time over hand milking.—Exchange.

The boys may be nervous but they don't have any trouble going to sleep when they crawl into the ring with Joe Lewis.

ear, and come up to Tony's side at the car, and rest his folded arms there as he talked. What he was thinking was in his blue eyes: that all the world was just this one slender girl with a white hat on dark hair and a brown band lying close to his.

"Tony!" he said. "Ye gods, what luck;" Brenda, glancing sidewise at her sister, saw that Tony was looking her loveliest; her dark blue eyes close to his own. "Where are you gals going?" Joe demanded. "Have you time to come down and see the place?"

"I thought you told me that it was in a mess, Joe, and you wanted us to get the whole overwhelming effect at the housewarming?"

"Ah, well, I did—ah, well, I do," he said, laughing confusedly. They were talking alone now, for some woman had come up on the driver's side of the car to talk to Brenda. "I'm talking to you, Tony," Joe said wonderingly. "It's you—in the flesh!"

Tony lowered her lashes, her lips crinkling.

"Is that so exciting? I have to go back tonight. I'm really on my way now."

Even though he is content with only half of the road—the middle half — the Middle-of-the-Road Robber is one of the highway's most unpopular—and dangerous —users.

By driving down the center of the road he takes something that doesn't belong to him.

The good driver has not forgotten the Golden Rule and gives the others users of the highway the same consideration that he expects of them.

"Let me—no, I can't," Joe said, remembering. "I'm taking poor Allen—the fellow who has the place next to mine, you know, to the hospital tonight. They're having a bad time—two kids, and he's got this bone rot, or whatever it is, and I promised I'd go over and get him, after dinner, and take him to Watsonville. She's got a brother who's a doctor there."

"Joe, you're good. You're always doing such kind things!"

"When are you going to do one—just a little, casual one?"

"There you go."

"I know. I said I wouldn't, didn't I? But think of it, Tony. You and me, shopping here at the Piggly, and then driving home with chops and asparagus and honey for your biscuits?"

"I do think of it, Joe," Tony said, very low. After a moment she went on: "Suppose you liked some splendid woman, worth three of me, Joe, only you never could get her? Would you leave me for her?"

The blood rushed up under his fair skin.

"I couldn't, I suppose. It's like that, of course."

"It's like that." And now the blue eyes were raised, looked full into his own. "So you see, then," said Tony.

"So I see then, I suppose," he said after a moment, shrugging. When Brenda turned around they were both laughing, and Tony was saying of Joe's oceanside farm: "It must be simply disgusting!"

But afterward, when she was saying good-by in Brenda's little apartment, she was serious again. Brenda had shyly detained her, a thin hand on Tony's shoulder, and had asked: "Do you—do you imagine he's unhappy too, Tony?"

"Larry," Tony had said rather than asked. "I don't know." Tony rested her head against Brenda's temple, like a tired child. "I love you, Bendy," she said. "You're sweet. Don't think I'm a fool, playing with fire, thinking it's smart to fall in love with the boss. I hate it. I didn't want it to be this way."

"There must be some way out!" Brenda said desperately.

"There isn't any way out, Bendy darling."

Tony kissed her and left her there. Getting into the car, entering once more upon the life that was so especially her own, the life of newspaper gossip and newspaper work, Tony felt in a wistful sort of fashion that she had never loved Brenda quite as much as she loved her now, or been so alienated from her.

It was eleven o'clock at night when she and the other reporters reached the city office to report their task done; Greeny was there, grudgingly content with what they had sent in; nobody else was there except a few stragglers, and poor Neverlon, entirely unconscious and sprawled on his desk. Tony went home to find her aunt alert and interested, and managed to report the major details regarding Brenda and Brenda's husband and Brenda's home before collapsing exhaustedly between the clean straight sheets and snapping off the light.

And then again, as darkness and peace and rest shut down upon her, the slow pictures of memory began to revolve: Larry in his office, Larry coming down to the city room for a busy moment; Larry overcoated and deep in conversation with men in the elevator; Ruth's drawing room with the wood fire and the teacups, and the photographs on the table and bookshelves, and the scent of toast, and Larry coming rosy and cold to the doorway to say, "No, no, thanks! I'm going to have a shower and change before dinner."

He always said that now, when he found Tony there, or made some excuse not to join her and Ruth. And for that reason Tony went as seldom as she could, went to Ruth's house only when Ruth's invitations were so pressing that to decline them might have been to arouse suspicion.

Once, quite unexpectedly, Ruth said: "Tony, you like Larry?"

"I adore him," Tony said simply, with a laugh and a flush.

"You two don't see each other as much as you did."

"He's my boss now, Ruth. He's the biggest man in the office—Danielson's gone, and Arnoldson's sick half the time. I can't get gay with Larry any more."

"Oh, if that's the reason." Ruth was satisfied. Anything that aggrandized her Larry was understandable to her.

But she had a quarrel with Tony, nevertheless. With much archness and much kindly cool even slightly condescending pleasure Ruth had accepted the situation between Tony and her nephew Joe Vanderwall. Joe was of the same lineage as herself; he was brilliant, successful, lovable, and he had means. All these things were extremely important to Ruth, to whom Tony was still naturally merely the clever and fascinating reporter to whom Mother had given her first handsome coat, and the tale of whose family's delightful makeshift and emergencies had opened to the heiress an unexplored section of life.

But if Joe liked Tony, and Joe made no secret of the fact that he did, then Ruth was enchanted with the idea that she and Larry would presently have this younger couple like a little sister and brother to oversee and advise and help. Her first astounded criticism of Tony had come when the changed attitude of the other three had revealed to her the unwelcome truth that somehow things were not going right between Tony and Joe.

"I think she has a good cheek, I really do!" Ruth said in amazement to Larry. "Tony surprises me. She appears to be the type that just naturally doesn't fall in love."

"She gets a great kick out of her work," Larry, scraping his chin with a bony brown hand after shaving, answered mildly.

"Work nonsense! Where'll her work get her in a few more years? There's no real future for a girl in newspaper work, and she certainly isn't going on this writing. She says herself she has no imagination."

"She has lots of imagination."

"D'you think so, Larry?"

"Oh, yes. She hasn't got it into line, that's all. I wish to heaven I had her imagination," Larry said. "She puts something into life. I don't know what it is—glamour—something."

"Well, I think she's a dear, and I think she's most amusing sometimes, although perhaps she rather overdoes it and makes things funny at the expense of the truth," Ruth was beginning guardedly, when Larry cut in healthily.

"That's the thing exactly. She adds glamour. That's all I meant by saying she has imagination. Now, you, Ruth, if you tell me a thing today it's just as you told it ten years ago, Tony never tells a thing twice alike."

"I'm afraid perhaps I call that truth," Ruth suggested, with a prim little cough. "And I'm afraid that I'm old-fashioned enough to think it's important."

Larry had heard this tone before, had been in this little predicament before. Tying his tie, looking at his wife through the high mirror of his chest of drawers, he said:

"She hasn't got sense enough to see what a chance she has with Joe. He's so big he can afford to act like a fool now and then, and Tony's just dumb enough to think that means he is a fool."

"She is dumb in some ways," Ruth said affectionately, in a mollified voice. And then curiously: "Larry, do you think it could be some one else?"

"You mean with Tony?"

"Yes; down in the office, I mean. Do you suppose that there's someone else?"

"Um!" Larry said, in the tone of one thinking.

"I'll bet you there is. For one thing, she acts like a girl in love."

"I don't know who it could be," Larry said, arranging a handkerchief in his breast pocket. "Come out and watch me have my breakfast."

"I'm going to have some, too," Ruth said, putting her feet out of the luxurious nest of satin comforters and lace pillows from which she had been watching him.

* * * * * * *

That same day, at three o'clock in the afternoon, Tony's desk telephone rang in all the other din of the city office, and Tony, answering it, heard Larry's voice.

"Tony? I'm glad I caught you. Could you come upstairs for a minute?"

The stars and Catharine wheels of opalescent light had settled a little, but her voice was uneven as she said: "Coming." She went into Larry's own sanctum, magnificent now in leather chairs and soft gray-brown eucalyptus walls.

Tony sat down opposite him, looked at him, smiling shakily, trembling. They were alone.

"There'll be a buzz about this downstairs," Larry said, looking at a pencilled note on his desk. "I thought I'd rather tell you. When did you see Bess Cutler last?"

"She was in a couple of days ago," Tony said, pulling at some quality in his tone. "She was having sinus trouble, and she felt kind of rotten," Tony went on, speaking the less elegantly because she was uneasy and in earnest. "Why?"

"She killed herself about an hour ago. O'Brien telephoned me. She had a photograph of Frank Fitch in her hands."

"Oh, heavens!" Tony whispered, staring at him, very white. "Killed herself?"

"Poison. They rushed her to the Emergency, but they say she was gone when the police got there."

"It makes me feel a little—sick," Tony said, holding on to the arms of her chair with gripped fingers.

"We're taking a Chicago trip for Fitch," Larry presently observed drily. The girl's look came back to his instantly. "I guess she knew what she was doing when that began, Tony. Fitch wasn't the first man who had ever come into her life, poor thing!"

"Oh, I'm so sorry for her!" Tony said. "She'd given up her apartment, and she missed it so! She was living with some friend out on the Panhandle. I don't think they got along very well. She told me she and Mabel had a scrap about a brassiere or something—"

And suddenly, as Larry laughed, she was laughing and crying at once, her drenched eyes buried in her hands. Confused and ashamed, she stood up, wiping her eyes, turning her back to him, and Larry came around the desk and braced her with his arms for a few dizzying seconds.

"I didn't want you to hear it downstairs in the office."

"I know. And I'm so grateful to you! I don't know why I'm laughing," Tony stammered.

She straightened up, and was free of his touch, and put out her hand to his. "Thanks so much, Larry; it knocked me breathless for a minute," she apologized. "But I'm all right now. I'll get out into the air and be fine!"

She Had a Photograph of Frank Fitch in Her Hands.

Fresh, sweet, her smooth brown cheek flawless, her soft dark hair tumbled in curves and rings about her face, her long dark lashes wet above the raised blue eyes, and the big white collar and plain dark frock, the slim silk-clad legs and square-toed shoes, all somehow expressing Tony, and no one but Tony, she stood close to him for a moment, and he felt the quick nervous pressure of her fingers on his wrist. Then she was gone, and the splendid office was quiet and empty again.

CHAPTER XVIII

"I'm from the Call. May I talk to you for five minutes, Miss Wallister?"

"Well, surely." The high-school superintendent had been eating a box lunch at her desk. Outside of her small office lay the empty classrooms, their littered desks deserted in the warm spring morning. She glanced at the clock.

"I'll only keep you a minute; I know this is your chance to get out into the air," Tony said, smiling. "But there was a queer little bit of business that came up, and I wanted to ask you about it. You're assistant superintendent of the Oakland schools, aren't you, Miss Wallister?"

"I am."

"Mr. Kern Opps is the superintendent, isn't he?"

"Well, yes." Miss Wallister was beginning to be a little uneasy, and Tony felt sorry for her.

"Is his brother-in-law Oliver Benedict, of the Oakland Sun?"

"You could ask Mr. Opps," Miss Wallister, definitely disturbed now, said guardedly.

"I don't have to. I know it. Let me tell you what all this is about, Miss Wallister," Tony said frankly, "and then you'll know what I'm after. Some time ago Shafts' Department Store, the biggest in Oakland, took away its advertising from us, the Call, in San Francisco, because it said it got much better response from advertising in the Oakland Sun. Now, that worried us, and we sent a man over here to Oakland to investigate, and this is what he found out. Shafts' had put a special advertisement in all the papers, inviting all high-school students to write in to the high-school equipment department, and join a club called 'The Undergrads.' They had Saturday hikes and contests; I don't know what they didn't have. The boys camped, and the girls made cakes, all that sort of thing. Do you happen to have noticed it?"

"I don't know that I did," said Miss Wallister, "and I think you had better talk to Mr. Opps himself; my time is so limited, and I don't quite know what you're driving at."

"I have talked to Mr. Opps.—Just a moment more, Miss Wallister, please. That is, someone from the office talked to Mr. Opps, and he admitted, that some weeks ago—"

"I don't know what he admitted, and I don't care. If you'll excuse me—"

"No, now wait just a moment," Tony said, in a persuasive, sensible tone. "He's not done anything wrong! And you haven't anything to do with it anyway."

"I certainly haven't anything to do with it," Miss Wallister agreed, with red cheeks and a rising voice, "for I neither know nor care what you're talking about!"

"Well, then will you just let me talk one moment more?" Tony asked simply. "I don't think you understand yet why I came over here to talk to you. The point is this: Did you have all your teachers give out postal cards to the students in the various classes, and have them, as a part of their business course, write into Shafts' and ask for information about the 'Undergrad Club'?"

"I don't know whether I did or not," Miss Wallister answered with a snap, "If I did, I see no reason why I shouldn't!"

"There is no reason why you shouldn't do that," Tony admitted. "It was telling them to say that they saw the advertisement in the Sun that—well, that interested us. Naturally, the Shafts people thought that the Sun was getting forty responses to the ad to every other paper's one."

"I don't know anything about it," Miss Wallister said, in the pause.

DAD PUTS STAMP ON SONNY'S EATS

Children Imitate Food Likes and Dislikes of Persons They Admire

If dad criticizes the food, don't blame the youngsters sitting at the table if they refuse to eat something new. That bit of psychology is offered to parents by Dorothy L. Moore, assistant professor of nutrition at Michigan State College. Taste in food is a matter of habit and must be developed like other habits, she says.

"Children are quick to imitate the likes and dislikes of father and mother or any other person whom they especially admire," according to Professor Moore. "We must not make the child 'food conscious'."

When serving food which the child may dislike, it is best to serve in small helpings and with other foods the child likes. The new food should be served a number of times at intervals until the child becomes familiar with the flavor, she insists.

Miss Moore has made a special study of diets for children of preschool age. Fried foods are taboo for the pre-school child and raw fruits and vegetables should be kept out of the diet until the age of three. One quart of milk per day is essential to the health of young children, according to Miss Moore.

A day's diet suggested for the preschool child, as prepared by Miss Moore, follows:

Breakfast: Prunes (seeded and cut up), wheat cereal with sugar and thin cream, ½ slice of buttered toast, and one glass of milk.

9:30 a. m.: Cod liver oil followed by ½ glass of orange juice.

Dinner: One small liver pattie, two to three mashed potatoes with butter, 1/3 to ½ cup buttered carrots mashed, ½ slice bread and butter, 1 small piece of sponge cake with fruit sauce, 1 glass milk.

Lunch at 3 p. m.: ½ glass of milk.

Supper: 1 egg coddled, ¾ cup cream of tomato soup, 1 buttered graham cracker, 1/3 to ½ cup string beans cut fine, 1/3 cup apricots cut fine, and 1 glass of milk.

While this campaign will be carried forward under the National Youth Administration, a newly organized federal agency of which Dr. William Haber, state welfare director is state chief, it has the support of all state police and safety organizations.

One of the first objectives of the campaign will be a thorough survey of traffic conditions in this city and the villages of the county with the elimination of all hazards as the ultimate goal. This survey will include a check on parking signs, conditions of streets and highways, all court convictions of persons involved in traffic accidents or violations, and traffic conditions generally.

Charlevoix county will be assigned workers for the next two months to conduct this survey and 40 other young men will be working in adjoining counties, according to Harry S. Keehne, of Traverse City, who has just returned from East Lansing where he has received an intensive training course in safety work. The young men to be employed must be beween the ages of 16 and 25 years and those on welfare or whose parents are receiving relief will have preference. Mr. Keehne will have supervision over 19 Northern Michigan counties.

SMOKERS CAUSE FIFTY PER CENT WOODS FIRES

State Conservation authorities at Lansing are pondering the 1935 fire report which shows—for the sixth successive year—that approximately 50 per cent of the forest fires in the state were supposedly due to careless smokers.

Of the 1,457 fire occurrences last year, 741 or more than half, are blamed on smokers. In 1934 the rate was 49.37 per cent.

Nearly 1,200 vessels of various descriptions are engaged in commercial fishing operations on Great Lakes waters under Michigan's jurisdiction. Total estimated value of these boats is $1,000,000.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS
By Ann Page

The weather situation throughout the country has not been such as to encourage either the production or shipping of food. This means higher prices for almost everything in the perishable line. Beef and pork are a little cheaper and lamb slightly so. Veal continues scarce and high.

Broccoli, peas and tomatoes are the best vegetable values available with the exception of such stapes as parsnips, turnips, potatoes and kale.

Macaroni and pork and beans are good standbys on cold days when appetites are ravenous. They are easy to prepare and inexpensive to serve.

Here are three menus at different budget levels for Sunday dinners.

Low Cost Dinner
Braised Beef Heart with Potatoes
Buttered Spinach
Bread and Butter
Cherry Jelly Custard Sauce
Tea or Coffee Milk

Medium Cost Dinner
Roast Pork Apple Sauce
Sweet Potatoes Broccoli
Bread and Butter
Floating Island
Tea or Coffee Milk

Very Special Dinner
Stuffed Celery
Roast Beef Browned Potatoes
Green Peas Tomato Salad
Bread and Butter
Spanish Cream with Strawberries
Coffee

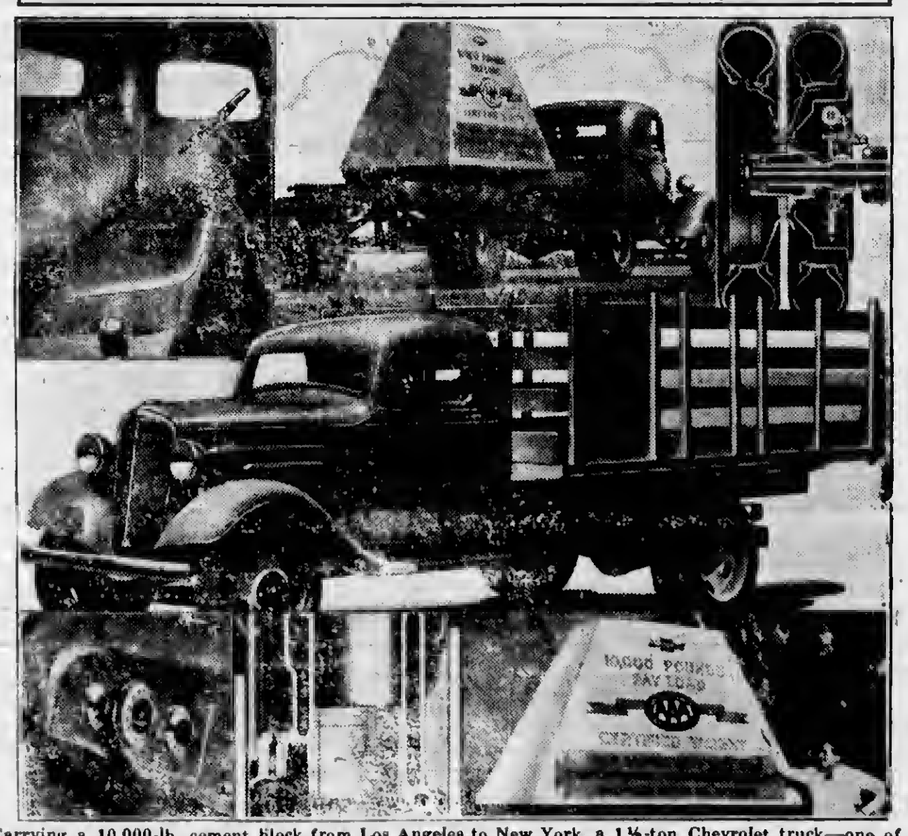
New Chevrolet Truck on Economy-Safety Run



Carrying a 10,000-lb. cement block from Los Angeles to New York, a 1½-ton Chevrolet truck—one of the new 1936 models just introduced—demonstrated that safe driving means economy. Speed limits were observed in every community, with 35 m.p.h. the maximum on the open road. The 3511.4 miles were completed on two quarts of oil and 308.6 gallons of gasoline, at a cost of 01.6 cents per mile, or one-third of a cent per ton mile. The entire run was completed without any mechanical failure, repairs, or even a scratched fender. The illustrations show the test truck and features of the new 1936 models. Coupe type cabs with solid steel roof, full-floating rear axle, and full-length water jackets, are some of the improvements. In the lower right, Harry Hartz, who drove the cross-continent test, is seen beside the 10,000-lb. block. The test was officially observed by the American Automobile Association.

MACKINAC BRIDGE REPORT IS GIVEN

J. H. CISSEL TELLS OF ENGINEERING ASPECTS

Explains Necessity for Bridge, Cost, Route and Other Interesting Details of Project

At a recent meeting of the Upper Peninsula Development Bureau a comprehensive report on the engineering aspects of the proposed Straits bridge was given by James H. Cissel, secretary of the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority.

In view of the interesting information contained in the report, we are publishing it as follows:

"The plan finally approved by the Bridge Authority and the one which forms the basis of the revised application now on file with the Public Works Administration provides for a direct crossing with terminals located at Mackinaw City and St. Ignace. Starting at the Mackinaw City terminal, the construction would consist of a causeway and viaduct approach extending some 4,600 feet (0.87 mile) to the main steel construction. The principal bridge structure would consist of 600 and 900 foot cantilever spans flanking the main span of 1,700 feet and would occupy a length of 14,000 feet (2.65 miles). The principal steel work would terminate approximately 8,700 feet (1.65 miles) from the St. Ignace shore line, and the approach on this end would be similar in construction to that on the Mackinaw City end. The total length of construction would be about 27,300 feet (5.17 miles). The main span of 1,700 feet would be located so as to span the deepest water and would provide a clearance of 135 feet above the water surface. The construction would provide for a two-lane highway and a single track railway with provisions for adding additional highway facilities whenever the traffic should warrant such addition. The estimated construction cost of this plan is $29,300,000.

"As planned the structure would rank in magnitude as one of the largest in the United States. It would require the solution of many major problems in design and construction, one of which is that of constructing foundations in water of considerable depth. It is probable that two of the proposed piers must be constructed to depths of about 180 feet below lake level. This has been frequently cited by laymen as impossible of solution. For the benefit of those skeptics allow me to point out that the foundations for the $75,000,000 San Francisco-Oakland bridge now being completed in California were sunk to a maximum depth of 240 feet below mean sea level. The foundations for the recently completed Huey P. Long bridge over the Mississippi River, above New Orleans, were sunk 180 feet below water level.

"Another problem requiring careful consideration is that of designing the sub-structure to resist ice pressure and this constitutes perhaps the only unique feature of the Straits Bridge design. It is not believed that this problem is as serious as some commentators have suggested and we refuse to believe that ice forms solid to the bottom of the Straits or that Lake Michigan is infested with icebergs as big as battleships. As a matter of fact, the main piers for the proposed bridge will weigh upwards of 60,000 tons each, which is no small amount to push around.

"The Act creating the Bridge Authority authorized it to pay the cost of the project by the issuance and sale of Bridge Revenue Bonds, and to fix and collect tolls from users of the bridge in such aggregate amount as is sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bond issue and provide the costs of operation and maintenance. The Authority has estimated that a total of $32,383,265 is required to finance the project. It has sought to obtain this fund through the PWA.

"If the application is approved, PWA would grant the sum of $14,572,469 without the obligation of interest or re-payment and would loan the Authority $17,810,796, taking as security therefor bridge revenue bonds issued by the Authority. In other words, the federal government through PWA would contribute 45 per cent of the cost and would buy at their face value sufficient revenue bonds to provide the remaining 55 per cent. The bonds issued by the Authority under this plan would pay interest at four per cent and an amortization schedule would be set up to provide for proper retirement of the bond issue.

"Considering potential revenues it should be noted that railroad and other utility users of the project are expected to provide approximately $250,000 per year, which means that between $810,000 and $940,000 per year must be obtained from highway traffic.

"It is believed that the continued development of the Upper Peninsula as a recreational center and the further improvement of highways leading to the Straits and in the Upper Peninsula will produce continual increase in traffic across the Straits for at least the next six years at a rate sufficient to yield the required income at the time the bridge is placed in operation and without increase in present charges. Should insufficient traffic develop, it might be necessary to slightly increase or adjust present toll charges or else modify the amortization schedule pertaining to the loan."

PYTHIANS INITIATED A LARGE CLASS MONDAY

A class of 11 candidates was initiated in the second degree Monday evening by Knights of Pythias. It is understood grand lodge officers will come here on February 24th to initiate a large class in the third degree. Plans for the affair, marking the first time grand lodge officers have visited here in several years, are being worked out by local Pythian officers.

PLAY EAST JORDAN HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

RAYDERS RETURN TO ACTION ON HOME COURT

First Contest Since January 28 Promises to Be Best of Season —Conference Standings

Charlevoix's Red Rayders will return to basketball competition on the home court Friday night after absence of over two weeks.

Charlevoix played its last game January 28th at Boyne City, and Friday night will meet the fast East Jordan aggregation, which holds second place in the Northern Michigan Class C Conference, in the first of a home-and-home series.

In view of the fact East Jordan is considered among the best of the conference teams and that a win for Charlevoix will boost them into second place, the contest promises to be an interesting one. The Rayders, it is understood, will still be without the services of "Chic" Callagher, center, absent from the line-up because of infection in his hand.

With the conference season nearing the home stretch, Crayling's snappy outfit perches securely in top position with a perfect record of eight games won. East Jordan is next to the leaders and Charlevoix and Gaylord are tied for third position.

The league standing as of February 3, is as follows:

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Grayling	8	0	1000
East Jordan	4	2	667
Charlevoix	3	2	600
Gaylord	3	2	600
Boyne City	3	4	428
Harbor Springs	1	4	200
Mancelona	1	5	167
Kalkaska	0	5	000

Conference coaches attended a meeting Saturday at Boyne City, called for the purpose of working out basketball schedules for next year and baseball schedules for the spring. While schedules have not been completed, it is understood all schools will book games within the conference as far as possible.

TWO DEAD, THIRD SURVIVES ICE FLOE ORDEAL

BROWN, 25, ONE OF TRIO LOST SATURDAY WALKED INTO GOODHART MONDAY AFTER 48 HOURS IN BOAT

Earl Cunningham, Coast Guard, and Claude Beardsley Frozen to Death—Bodies Recovered Wednesday by Goodhart Party Ending Two-Day Search—Tragedy Shakes City

Clayton Brown, 25, lies today in Charlevoix Hospital, miraculously the survivor of a winter Lake Michigan ice tragedy which has taken the lives of Coastguardsman Earl Cunningham, 40, and Claude Benrdsley, 51.

When hope had practically been abandoned following search which started last Saturday night at around 6 o'clock when Cunningham, the intended rescuer of Brown and Beardsley, marooned on an ice floe two miles beyond South Point were last seen, Brown staggered into the house of George Andrews, Goodhart Indian.

When word came that Brown was at Goodhart, a party composed of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Brown, cousins, and Dr. Frank, of Harbor Springs; Sheriff Thomas Bryant, Deputy Eddie Sears, George Griffith, Dr. Mast and Ralph Peters, of Petoskey, drove to Goodhart and brought Brown to Charlevoix in Peters' ambulance.

To a Courier representative he recounted his harrowing experience, beginning when they were swallowed in darkness Saturday night. The story follows:

"The waves were high and the snow was blowing so thick that we could barely see each other, a few feet apart in the boat.

"After a couple of hours we began to get cold. We whipped our arms and moved our feet as best we could in the small boat. The bottom of the boat was covered with ice and it was very difficult to move about in it.

"We didn't say much to each other at first, but after the first few hours we encouraged each other to keep up heart and keep going. The main topic of our discussion was whether we could reach shore.

"Thought We'd Come Through"

"We all thought that we could come through it. As near as I could tell we hit the ice field about 3 o'clock Sunday morning. It was storming so badly that we could not see and we didn't know where we were so we just sat there and waited.

"The storm at that time was very severe. As daylight came on we could see that there was open water around us. We were wedged in among a few large cakes of ice. They were not large enough, however, so that we could get out of the boat upon them. It was about this time that the cold began to tell on us. We talked about freezing to death and then would warn each other that if we didn't move around we surely would freeze.

Cunningham Dies

'This went on throughout the day. Cunningham would doze off to sleep. Claude and I would shake him to wake him up. At about 6 o'clock at night, I believe, we could get no words out of him. I took him into my arms and covered him with a piece of canvas that we had. Shortly after 6 o'clock he died.

"Claude and I kept up as much conversation as we could, talked about our families and so forth. Claude began to fear that he was going to freeze to death. He said that he wished he could see his family again before he died. We both talked about our families and wished that we hadn't gone fishing Saturday.

"I was thinking of my wife, who is 24, and my two children, Patricia Ann, who is two, and Shirley, who is four months. Somewhere around 9 o'clock Sunday night, Claude and I got out of the boat. It had been freezing all day and we found the ice solid enough to stand upon.

"Claude could hardly keep his feet. He knew that he was dying. He laid down on the ice and I took the tarpaulin and covered him. He died about 10 o'clock, I believe.

"I walked around the boat until daylight, keeping moving so I would not freeze.

Started for Shore

"As soon as it was light Monday, I started toward the shore. In some places the ice was so thin I had to work along on my stomach. I would go to sleep but my head would bump on the ice and awaken me. I went to the first cabin I saw. They wouldn't believe me at first when I told them who I was.

"The Indian, George Andrews, said he had heard we were lost but didn't believe we could have survived. I didn't know where we had drifted, but as soon as I saw the church at Goodhart I knew my bearings."

Outlined briefly, the incidents preceding Brown's appearance started at 1:45 Saturday afternoon when Surfman William Woods noted from the station look-out the parting of ice floes off South Point. On the floes, in addition to Brown and Beardsley, were Cleo LaPeer and son, Lloyd, and Eugene Bearss. Coast guards under George Kelderhouse, acting captain, rushed to the rescue of the marooned men with a flat-bottom skiff equipped with runners. They took the craft across the bay to the open water off South Point.

Surfman Quinton Duhn made the first crossing to the drifting floe, rescuing Bearss and LaPeer and his son. Cunningham volunteered to go after Brown and Beardsley. A wind and snow storm, which had gradually increased in force since the first rescue trip, had assumed blizzard proportions. The gap of water had rapidly widened. Cunningham was seen to reach the marooned men and take them aboard the boat. They were last seen making a losing fight to reach shore.

Noting the plight of the three men, coast guards on shore returned to the station for a larger boat. A small power boat was loaded upon a sleigh behind a team of horses and with the aid of rapidly gathering volunteers, towed to South Point. The team was unhitched and the load pulled by hand over rough ice to open water a half mile away. There followed an unsuccessful search throughout the remainder of the night.

Efforts were resumed Sunday. The big power boat was launched after volunteers and guardsmen had dug snow from the incline. Drift ice choking the channel had to be dynamited and, with nearly a hundred persons pulling on a rope fastened to its bow, the craft was towed to open water. Another unsuccessful searching expedition which ended with darkness followed.

Two airplanes joined the search Monday. A coast guard patrol plane from the Soo, with Lieut. S. J. Waycichowski in command and John Flannery as pilot, made headquarters at Beaver Island, making several trips over the lake in the vicinity of the Beavers and south. The Detroit News plane covered the floes from South Fox Island north to the Beavers.

With Brown's appearance and tragic story of the death of his companions, search started Tuesday morning for the bodies off Goodhart. Tuesday's efforts by Charlevoix coast guards and Goodhart volunteers failed when a snow storm around noon hampered visibility after the party had gone nine miles out on the ice floes.

Today the bodies were located approximately nine miles southwest of Cross Village by the coast guard patrol plane operating from Beaver

Georgo Kelderhouse, acting captain, and other members of the Charlevoix Coast Guard unit, are taking the means of the Courier columns to express their appreciatioo for the assistance and splendid cooperatloo they bave been given by local citizeos in tbeir efforts of the past few days.

PLAN FOR RECREATIONAL CARNIVAL

COUNTY-WIDE EVENT HERE ON FEBRUARY 19 OR 20

Program of Outdoor, Indoor Competitive Events, Musical Features, Announced by Dean Davenport

Dean Davenport, Charlevoix county director of WPA recreational projects, has announced tentative plans for a county-wide recreational carnival to be held in this city either February 19 or 20.

With the view of providing the public an opportunity to witness the varied program of recreational activities now being conducted throughout the county, the event takes on the aspect of a demonstration of the work as well as providing excellent entertainment.

The afternoon program as tentatively outlined is comprised of outdoor events. A hockey game between Charlevoix and Ironton teams is listed, also speed skating races with competitors from all sections of the county. Fancy skating exhibitions are planned and bobsleds from Boyne City and East Jordan will be brought for coasting on Grant street hill.

The evening events will be indoors at the school gymnasium. Music and competitive sports will be featured. A vocal chorus from Boyne City will be heard, a class of violin students from East Jordan, and a band comprised of members from Boyne City and Boyne Falls. Indoor baseball, volley ball and basketball games will match teams competing in the recreational leagues of the several cities of the county.

If present plans are carried out, the carnival program will be held in Boyne City and East Jordan following the Charlevoix event.

The program is free to the public, Mr. Davenport stated.

DICKENS CLUB OBSERVED 124TH BIRTH OF AUTHOR

Delightful Affair Held Monday at Home of Mrs. Harry A. Craig

Members of the Charles Dickens Club celebrated the 124th anniversary of the birth of their patron-author at the home of Mrs. Harry A. Craig, the Club president, Monday afternoon.

An old-fashioned English boiled dinner was served at 1:30 and the 20 members sat at a long table artistically decorated in yellow and Chinese blue, the club colors, and partook of viands as interesting and as appetizing to the modern palate as to that in "ye olden times."

The afternoon's program consisted of special musical numbers and a general discussion of various phases of Diceusean lore.

CENTRAL LAKE

(Too late for last week)

Still our snow and cold weather continues.

J. W. Morse was in East Jordan on business Friday.

Sydney Williams visited his wife and daughter at Creswell last week.

Arthur Knowles and Vern Bullion visited at the James Dawson home the first of the week.

Mrs. Sadie Arnold was in Petoskey last week and the doctor tells her she is coming on all right.

William Farrel has been quite ill the last few days, but is feeling some better at present writing.

Kurgy Arnold called at the James Dawson home last week. The roads are in pretty good shape now.

Charles Morse called at the O. R. Morse home at Bay View Sunday and found his brother improving rapidly.

Snow plows are kind of held up this (Tuesday morning). The caterpillar up on Sage's Corners has a cocoon around it.

Harry Chamberlin was a visitor Sunday at the home of his brother, northwest of town. His mother is stopping there this winter.

The men were at work last week widening the road north of town, between here and Ellsworth. It has made quite an improvement.

Mrs. Wyn Batterbee and son, Wyn, from the Fairman Orchards, west of Ellsworth, were visitors at Eastport Sunday, and attended church.

Albert Barnes, of Creswell, and Mr. and Mrs. McPherson called at the Harvey Brouwer home Sunday. Mr. Brouwer is feeling better again.

Peter Russell is home from Detroit and is helping his father get up wood. There appears to be a slacking off in work at Detroit at the present time.

Word comes that Lester Arnold, at Traverse City, is much better. As he is a World War veteran, he will probably get some help on soldiers' bonus.

Mrs. Alsista Ison writes from Utah that she arrived safely and that Ellsworth Archer is much better. She mailed a enrd with a sack of salt attached.

Rev. Mumby went to Barnard again Sunday. He and Rev. John Alexander, of Bellaire, attended the Ministerial Association at East Jordan last Monday.

Much sympathy is felt for the Clarence Boals family, of Creswell, who were burned out last week. Winter is the worst of all times for that kind of a catastrophe.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lewis were visitors Sunday at the Harvey Brouwer home at Eastport. They drew the baby to Eastport on the hand-sleigh from their farm, about three miles.

Walter Anderson and family were visitors last week at the home of Mrs. Anderson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Dawson, in town. Mr. Anderson now has work in the car factory at Flint.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

People were glad to see Mrs. Rauch back at Eastport Baptist church again last Sunday. She left her parents in Ohio feeling some improved in health. She says they have had 21 below zero weather out there.

Peter Swanson people attended church at Eastport Sunday. Their niece, Phyllis Swanson, walked part of the way to Bellaire to attend Holiness church. She returned three weeks ago from Detroit.

Chilton Stafford has been drawing wood to town from his place north of town this week. Hidred Stafford attended church at Eastport last Sunday. A goodly number were present considering the weather.

G. A. Morse writes from Clearwater, Fla., that it is very cold there. A lady from Petoskey went back home again, saying she wanted to go where it is warm. He says hotels are complaining of lack of business.

The funeral of William Dewey, of Bellaire, was held last Friday. He had been ill for quite a while. He was an old resident of that place, his wife being Mrs. Emma McEwan, formerly living northwest of town at Eastport.

Jerry Aardema has finished moving from the Ida Brouwer farm, between Eastport and Atwood, to the Henry Vanderark farm north of town. He will work the farm next summer. Harold Sotel will live on the Ida Brouwer farm.

Rev. John Alexander attended the big Ministerial Association meeting at East Jordan last Monday. A general discussion was planned for that day. Rev. Mumby and Rev. Wall could not attend. Ministers from the northern counties usually attend these meetings.

Pentecostal Sunday school attendance was 30 a week ago, and 34 last Sunday. Rev. Snider now preaches in the afternoon and evening at Central Lake, his wife filling the appointment at East Jordan. Good crowds are attending and good spiritual meetings held.

Guess the American Legion people must have had an interesting time in the storm Monday night when they went to the big Legion meeting at Bellaire. Arthur Knowles and Allen Aardema were among those attending from here. Rev. Mumby was also planning on attending.

There was an attendance of 14 a week ago Sunday and 21 last Sunday at the Baptist Sunday school at Eastport. Mrs. Rauch has returned, leaving her parents fairly comfortable. She says it was 21 below zero in Ohio. An all day meeting will be held by the Aid Society at the church this week.

FAIRVIEW-BANKS

(Too late for last week)

Ben Timmer has been hauling some dry wood to Ellsworth the past week.

Harold Aenis, of Central Lake, was in this locality Friday afternoon on business.

Arthur Wiltse and Willard Slootbaak helped Harry DeGroot break in a pair of colts.

Mr. and Mrs. William Timmer visited with Mr. and Mrs. Jay Kniper Tuesday afternoon.

The Misses Gertrude Postma and Kathryn Klooster visited with Cora and Kathryn Timmer Friday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Timmer, of Charlevoix, were dinner guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Oosterbaan, Sunday.

With the large amount of snow falling this winter, our road men had to raise up the snow fences a notch or two the past week.

The ground hog must have seen his shadow yesterday, as the sun shone part of the day, so we can expect some more winter weather.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Parsons, of Ellsworth, and Mr. and Mrs. William Timmer were callers at the home of Harry DeGroot Thursday afternoon.

H. S. Peebles, John W. Brown and H. J. Timmer were in Central Lake Thursday afternoon, attending the annual meeting of the Traverse Bay Telephone Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Oosterbaan and son, Victor, visited with their parents Wednesday, Mr. Oosterhaan helping to extend the garage to accommodate the new car recently purchased.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Timmer and daughter, Kathryn, enjoyed a visit with Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Goeman, in Central Lake, Thursday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Goeman formerly lived in this locality.

The sad news of the death of Joseph Gaunt, of East Jordan, reached our community Saturday afternoon. Mr. Gaunt had many friends in this territory, and was well and favorably known, having lived and farmed in this community, west of Ellsworth, some years ago before moving to East Jordan.

We are very glad that the cold wave period and storms, announced by radios, and told us by newspapers, has missed our territory to some extent, although we have plenty of snow causing traffic to be tied up to some extent, and no mail for one day, but with the assistance of the county snow plow our main roads are open for traffic and in very good condition.

Recognize Whooping Cough In Its Early Stages

Whooping cough was responsible for 2,177 deaths in Michigan during the 10-year period from 1924 to 1933, more than were caused by either scarlet fever or typhoid. Of these deaths, 62 per cent were of children under three. Whooping cough ranks among the dangerous communicable diseases, and the younger the child the greater the hazard.

The organism causing whooping cough is present in the secretions from the mouth and nose of anyone having the disease. It is usually spread from person to person though it may be transmitted by articles contaminated with such secretions.

Whooping cough begins much like an ordinary cold, with a dry cough and running nose. The cough becomes more persistent and shows a tendency to occur in "spells." If, after one or two weeks, the cough becomes worse, especially at night, and vomiting follows spasms of coughing, one may look for the "whoop," an indrawn gasping breath with a scraping or crowing sound.

Two weeks is the usual interval elapsing from the time infection is received until the symptoms appear, but it may vary from five days to more than 20. As a rule, if a child does not develop any symptoms for two weeks after exposure, parents may feel reasonably secure. Attendance of a physician is as important in whooping cough as in any other communicable disease. Proper treatment may reduce the severity and duration of the attack.

In the first or catarrhal stage, bronchitis is always present. When occurring during the latter part of the disease, it must be regarded as a dangerous complication and it alone is responsible for nine-tenths of the deaths caused by whooping cough. Your doctor may wish to use a vaccine which is harmless and which, in many cases, seems to have been helpful for prevention and in treatment. Recently a vaccine has been developed which appears to be much more successful in preventing whooping cough than that formerly used.

Feeding becomes a serious problem; the meals should be light and nourishing and, if one meal is vomited, another should be given immediately as each paroxysm is generally followed by a period of quiet. An egg well beaten in milk with a little sugar and vanilla may be given.

See that he gets plenty of fresh air. Keep the room well aired night and day. While he is convalescing, unless it is raining, take him out every day, on the roof or porch, or in the yard; but do not allow him to mingle with others.

Many children lose weight and become very weak from whooping cough. In this condition, they easily get pneumonia, or even tuberculosis, and other serious diseases. Whooping cough may also cause heart strain. Do not let the child return to school or play until the doctor has pronounced him well. All matter that comes from the mouth and nose while the child is sick should be received in a piece of clean old cloth or paper napkin and burned, for it is largely through carelessness in coughing and in the disposal of nose and throat discharges that the disease is spread. Keep separate cups, glasses, plates and spoons for the child while he is sick. Paper cups and plates that can be burned are the best.

Prompt isolation of exposed children upon any sign of a cold or cough until the nature of the illness is determined, will do much to check the spread of whooping cough. In Michigan, children must be isolated for three weeks after development of the characteristic cough. Avoidance of infection is by far the safest course in whooping cough.

What Science Has Found Out About The Great Apes

An article, in The American Weekly, with Sunday's Detroit Times, discloses many interesting results, including the curious discoveries that baboons can't count above three; chimpanzees hold carnivals; gorillas respect property rights—but monkeys seem to be unable to comprehend death.

Exactly what you care to know about winter gasoline

No gasoline can start up any quicker than it vaporizes. You know how heat makes vapor, but it's something different to get up a vapor in winter cold. The special winter blending we have carefully worked out for Conoco Bronze makes it vaporize even when a carburetor is sucking in the coldest outside air you'll find in the U.S. With this high-explosive vapor and any kind of spark, only one thing can happen—a good fast start.

When you absolutely know this about a gasoline you know why to choose it for a time like February around here. The biggest reason in your mind for getting Conoco Bronze this weather is its easy starting. Yet it is not like those "winter-type" gasolines that cut down on full mileage. With your Winter Blend Conoco Bronze you can count on the whole ball o' wax—no shortened mileage—no hit-or-miss getaway—no long-time choking that ruins your oil and maybe your engine—no starting or battery worries. You can just put all of that down.

"You don't remember Mr. Opps giving you instructions that that was to be done?"

"I tell you I don't remember anything about it."

"That's funny, for he does," Tony said musingly. "Now, listen, don't get angry at me, Miss Wallister," she added disarmingly; "I'm a working woman like yourself. They give me certain assignments on my paper, and I have to follow them up. I don't know anything about this story, and I don't care anything, except to do my end honestly. All I know is that Mr. Fitch, our managing editor, called me into his office this morning and told me that he had been suspicious of the means by which the Shafts advertising had been handled over here, and that Mr. Opps—" Tony glanced at a note in her hand, "Mr. Kern Opps," she said, "had admitted that he had used the schools to further the interests of his brother-in-law's paper. Now probably you had no responsibility in the matter at all—you were merely acting upon his orders—"

"If I did that or anything else," Miss Wallister said with angry promptness, as Tony paused to look at her hopefully, "you may be very sure it was acting under orders!"

"I should suppose so," Tony conceded.

"You don't think for a moment that I'd take a step like that on my own?"

"When was this?" Tony asked, adept now at closing the net. But the shrill, harassed, anxious assistant superintendent was too quick for her.

"I don't remember the incident at all, and I'd advise you to talk to Mr. Opps."

"Someone else in the office talked to him," Tony explained patiently; "he admitted it, and said that he was quite within his rights. Maybe he was, I don't know. The point is that you are his assistant, and we want to know whether or not you feel that that was a perfectly justifiable thing to do."

"I don't think it matters what I feel." With that she reached for the phone and put in a call for Mr. Opps.

"It would matter in this way, Miss Wallister. Honestly," Tony said, smiling, "I am merely making this suggestion: if this get Mr. Opps into trouble—and it might—with the board of education, it might be a good thing for you to have put yourself on record as disapproving of it."

"I won't put myself on record."

Tony glanced at her notes.

"This is all I have," she said. "'Kern Opps admits use of stamped postcards supplied by the Sun in classrooms; says he was entirely justified.' Opps may not be any too secure in his seat when this comes out. You're his subordinate, and naturally you did what he told you to do. But I should think—"

She hesitated, looking at the other woman sympathetically. In the silence the telephone rang shrilly, and Miss Wallister, without removing her eyes from the other woman's face, mechanically reached for it, presently returned it to its hook.

"Mr. Opps is out," she said, turning back to Tony. "You were going to say—?"

"Well, I was merely going to say that in your place I'd tell the simple truth," Tony said. "You can't get into trouble telling the simple truth: 'Mr.' Opps did this—I did that'—you don't have to worry about it, because it's true."

"Otherwise," she went on, as the trapped woman looked at her dubiously, not knowing what to believe or to do, "otherwise I report that you didn't do it, and the other report is that Mr. Opps acknowledges that he did do it, and you'll have a buzz of reporters here asking you how it happens that you forgot the whole thing entirely, and probably several kids delighted to get their names into the paper by saying that they remember filling out the postcards and being instructed to say that they saw the advertisement in the Sun."

Miss Wallister was sitting facing Tony, her narrowed eyes speculative behind their glasses, her face red. Presently, without removing her gaze, she leaned slightly toward the left and opened the lower drawer of her desk. From it she took a postal card and tossed it to Tony.

"There!" she said. "I'd rather have spoken to him about it first, but since he's given you the whole thing, I'm not going to lie about it. Mr. Opps and I have always been friends, but I thought at the time he was taking a chance, and you can say that I was acting under his directions. I could have reported it to the board, of course; it didn't seem to me important. The children are having business courses, and we encourage them to consult the newspapers for ads and rates and everything else. Our boys keep a regular stock and bond board going, and they get very furious week and week about getting as stenographers."

"I think that's a splendid idea," Tony murmured, her hand trembling as she put the precious postal card securely in her bag. "I wonder if the other high schools have practical courses like that."

"I don't believe they do." The assistant superintendent aired her views quite eloquently. Tony hated to remember afterward that Miss Wallister offered her a enamel from a flap bag before she went away.

Tony went into the office at six o'clock to meet a sour greeting from the city editor.

"Get anything on the Oakland thing?" he asked.

"Yep."

"No, did you?" Greeny asked, impressed. "Better go right in; here, I'll go with you."

When they were in Mr. Fitch's office Greeny said: "Miss Tuft is on that Oakland school superintendent story."

"Get anything on it?" Fitch asked harshly.

"I got it," Tony said simply, experiencing the most thrilling sensation the newspaper reporter ever knows.

"She talk?"

"Miss Wallister?"

"If that's her name—yes."

"Yes. She talked. There's one of the postal cards," Tony said, displaying it. A simple enough card printed in ink script with the words: "I am a student in the Oakland high school. Having seen your advertisement in the Sun I am very much interested in the Undergrad club, and would be glad to learn the conditions of membership."

"Where'd you get this?"

"She gave it to me. That's Opps' handwriting; that was the model."

Mr. Fitch held it in his hands for a few seconds, considering it. Then he said, "Wait here a minute."

Presently the managing editor came back, and with him Mr. Arnoldson and a young man introduced as "Mr. Philliber." The last was a notary public.

"You say you got the Oppa story?" Mr. Arnoldson said. Tony quaked with happy pride and awe.

"You're going to tell us only the simple truth, Miss—Taft," Arnoldson said, pushing a comfortable revolving chair toward her, "and so you needn't have the slightest uneasiness at Mr. Philliber's taking it down. Just be careful, that's all, and be sure of what you say. You have no objection to having it witnessed afterward?"

"None whatever," Tony said, feeling excited and important. She talked carefully, not exaggerating. The surrender of the postal card finished the story, and the notary indifferently asked her if she would swear to it. Tony had done this before. "To my share of it," she agreed.

"Well done, Miss Taft," Mr. Arnoldson said then, going away. Mr. Fitch echoed the praise, and by this Tony knew that they were extraordinarily exhilarated.

"Who'a got Opps' story?" Tony asked, turning toward the city office between Greeny and Mr. Fitch.

"That's the interesting part of it, Miss Taft," Frank Fitch exulted. "No one has talked to Opps yet. But we'll get his story now fast enough, without any trouble! She's squealed, and that'll bring him right into line."

Tony stopped short, and the men stopped with her.

"You mean he hadn't talked?"

"Nope. We thought it was best to handle it this way," Fitch said complacently. "I sent a man over to talk real estate with Opps this morning at half-past eleven. Opps had some interest in a development called 'Paradise Oaks' over there. This fellow suggested that he drive out with Opps to see the place; that's why he wasn't in his office when you were talking to his assistant."

"Oh, but I lied to her," Tony began, in a hard voice.

"You got your story, and that's all the Call expects of you," Frank Fitch said smoothly. "Thank you!" He closed his door.

She and Greeny were out in the city room now. Tony looked at the man voicelessly for a long minute.

"She'll lose her job," Tony said, breathing hard.

"Oh, no, she won't!"

"Greeny," the girl demanded, holding herself in, "is that fair?"

"Aw, shucks, what's the diff?" Greeny pleaded. "That's the way Fitch has gotten where he is, and he's the smartest man in the business. There's nobody can run a story to earth the way Frank can. Opps had no business to do it, and if he gets hell for it, it's coming to him!"

"Aw, Shucks, What's the Diff?" Greeny Pleaded.

Tony went to her desk and sat down. She felt sick. Indifferently she tried to bring her mind to her social notes; it was no use. She had been absorbed in her assignment all afternoon; she had run down his story for Fitch, whom she despised, and in doing so had injured, perhaps ruined, a harmless, nervous, hard-working woman of forty, who had believed in her and listened to her and taken her advice—and even, as Tony writhed to remember, had offered her forlorn little mashed caramels in a paper bag!

Tony sat brooding. Quite suddenly taking the telephone, she asked for Mr. Bellamy's office; she must talk to him about it.

Mr. Bellamy was in Los Angeles and would not be back until tomorrow. A dullness, a blankness seemed to follow the announcement; Tony sat for a while with her head in her hands.

Fitch had gotten her into this; Frank Fitch, whose morals were the scandal of the office, had suavely deceived her into deceiving this other woman; Antoinette Taft, who had always prided herself upon being honorable—fine—! No, she couldn't bear it.

She seized a piece of paper and slipped it into her typewriter. It was the engraved city room correspondence paper upon which she sometimes wrote social notes.

"Dear Mr. Greenwood," typed Tony, her breath coming hard, her eyes glittering and tearless with anger, "Herewith I tender you my resignation from the staff of the Call. I want to thank you for all your kindness to me, and to assure you that no assignment you ever gave me would have made me feel this step necessary. Next week I will come in and say good-by to you and the boys, but tonight I am too much upset by the disgraceful part I played in today's assignment to be able to do anything except go home."

She leaned over to Van Florence's desk and slipped the note to him.

"Give that to Greeny, will you please?" she said unsteadily. "I'm going home."

"Sure" Van answered, not looking up. Tony went to the pegs where hung her hat and coat and took off her inky and rumpled smock. It was good-by to the smock, and dirty washbasins, and the unspeakable roller towels; good-by to the blue cigarette smoke, and the clatter of typewriters and the rumble of men's voices; to Greeny anxious, scowling, shirt-sleeved, twisted in his chair with one leg up over his desk, and to the clicking machines on the A. P. desk, the press boys coming in sweaty and grimed with trailers of galley proof, and the rustle-rustle-rustle of all the newspapers in all the world. Was she acting like a fool? No, Cliff and adorable, consoling, blundering old Bruce and Aunt Meg were very sure that she was not a fool.

Having heard the whole story, they applauded her, as she ate her late supper; they told her that she had been trapped into an intolerable position.

"The funny thing about a job is," Tony mused, "that when you're in, you feel so secure. And when you're out, and job-hunting, you feel like a beggar again!"

"It's true," Cliff smiled over his cigarette. "But Greenwood'll send for you tomorrow. They won't let you go like that. What does Mr. Bellamy think of this sort of thing? Did he know that they'd tricked you into it?"

"Larry's in Los Angeles. No, he wouldn't know anything about that. It was just one of Frank Fitch's bright ideas."

"You'll see, Tony. Greenwood'll send for you tomorrow," said Aunt Meggy.

Too many of the New Year's resolutions we make are negatives—"don'ts"—silly to begin with, and impossible to keep.

Yet the impulse to make the new year better than the old one is almost irresistible when we face the clean expanse of a fresh calendar.

Let's get off on the right foot this year. Let's combine our ambition with common sense. There are things we can do—constructive, positive things— that will make 1936 a year we can be proud of. One of them is to live within our budgets.

That doesn't mean skimping and doing without. It means deciding on our needs and getting the most for what we pay.

Resolve now to buy wisely—to read the advertisements in this newspaper regularly—to know in advance what you can afford to buy and where to buy it. Compare prices and values in the advertising pages first. Make every dollar do more. Then step forward into 1936 with assurance.

The tragedy has brought sorrow not only to the families of the victims, but to all residents of this city.

Cunningham leaves his wife, Helen, and three sons, Richard, 10, Herbert, 6, Wayne, 5. He served 11 months in France during the World War and had been in the coast guard service since 1928. He was stationed at Hammond's Bay until September 20, 1935, when he was transferred to Charlevoix.

LEGION ACTIVITIES
By F. V. Tyler

At its regular meeting, Tuesday evening, the post commander, on motion of the members present, appointed a committee of five, consisting of Comrades Meggison (chairman), Goss, Bulow, Henry and Kullander, with power to act in the case of the late Coastguardsman Cunningham, formerly a member of the Rogers City Legion post. This committee is charged with the duty of seeing to it that Cunningham's dependants get the benefit of his adjusted compensation as a World War veteran, the government burial fund allowance for veterans, the government compensation for widows with children, and the Carnegie Hero Fund award (if eligible, according to the regulations). This last carries with it a medal and $1,000, payable to the widow.

The post also voted to contribute $10 to the fund collected by subscription this week for the benefit of the Beardsley and Brown families, victims of the recent tragedy.

Much interest is being shown in the proposed amateur night which the Legion is sponsoring. Fifteen or 16 entries have already appeared and more are expected after announcement of the date. February 28th, which falls on Friday, has been chosen for this event.

The Washington's Birthday dance at The Argonne is the object of present plans, which will be announced in detail in next week's paper.

Frills for Valentine's Day

There was a time, not more than a few generations ago, when St. Valentine's day ranked in importance with Christmas and New Year's, and ladies received bits of ornamented lace and paper with blushes, trembling hands and fluttering hearts. With the arrival of the commercial Valentine, most of the heart throbs left this loved day, so be careful when you open your mail—you'll be lucky if you don't receive at least one comic Valentine!

Although the sentiment of those days is seemingly past, the modern housewife likes to observe Valentine's day because of the many traditions and the way in which this day lends itself to decorating schemes. Hearts are trumps on this day, and whether you're partying or preparing the usual family dinner, it should be a "hearty" affair. Heart-shaped slices of cooked carrot floating in the vegetable soup will add to the general festivity of the dinner—or you might serve heart-shaped gelatin salads with your dinner and for the dessert, have a plate of heart-shaped cookies for the children and toast hearts and assorted cheeses for yourselves. At any rate, here are my suggested menus for a dinner at home—and also for a bridge tea. I hope you'll like them!

The address of Attorney Floyd A. Supp before the young people of the Methodist church Sunday evening on the topic, "Playing the Game As a Lawyer Sees It," was remarkably well adapted to young minds and held the group in almost breathless attention.

GREEN ACT MONEY WILL BE GIVEN TO COUNTIES

Tax lists by which the Department of Conservation will remit nearly $240,000 to counties, townships and school districts this year under the Green act, are now being prepared by the lands division of the department.

The Green act requires the payment by the state of 10 cents an acre in taxes on all state-owned lands except state parks up to 1,000 acres in area. Since there are now approximately 2,450,000 acres held by the state the total payments by the state to local governmental units will amount to about $240,000.

Then there is the fellow who picked out the coldest winter in decades to get lost while climbing a mountain.

Probably the most surprised individual who ever lived was the Indiana gent who stroked a cat's fur the wrong way in a gas-filled room.

Lately we have begun to worry for fear the time is coming when Fr. Coughlin won't be able to find anything more to condemn in the ultra-rich.

We never worry about the man who borrows the paper. When he quits borrowing his neighbor's copy we'll know there's nothing in it worth reading.

And Now In Closing—

"People who are concerned about the technical consistency of others often make a mistake of regarding their occupation too seriously. What we ought all to strive for is growth in wisdom each day even though it may leave us with regrets that we were not wiser yesterday." — Newton D. Baker.

OPENING SAFETY DRIVE FOR '36 IN TWO WEEKS

State-Wide Poster Contest Sponsored by Automobile Club of Michigan

The opening safety drive of 1936 to further reduce traffic accidents among school children in Michigan will begin within two weeks with a state-wide poster contest for elementary school pupils, it was announced today by H. O. Rounds, director of the safety and traffic division of the Automobile Club of Michigan. "Street Safety" will be the poster theme for children up to and in the sixth grade.

This contest, to be under the sponsorship of the Automobile Club, is in keeping with a national movement which recommends poster and essay contests as a means to reduce fatal accidents 35 per cent.

Cash prizes and medals will be awarded winners of the contest, the first held in four years. Originality of theme, neatness and excellency of art work will count in the awarding of prizes. Complete details will be sent to school principals in the near future, Rounds said.

A school principal with two other persons will form a judging committee to choose the best two posters in the school. In cities where there is a club branch, these posters will be sent to the office of the local manager, who will select an impartial committee of citizens of which one will be a newspaperman. In towns where the club does not have branches, newspaper editors will be asked to act as committee chairmen.

This committee will judge the two best in the town or city and forward winning posters to Rounds in Detroit. A third committee in Detroit will decide the state winner who will receive a $25 cash award. Second prize will be $10. A number of lesser amounts will be given to pupils receiving honorable mention.

"The poster contest is a continuation of the club's effort to make children conscious of the many highway dangers," Rounds said in discussing the competition. "It is interesting to note that from the time the automobile was invented up to and including 1930, there was an increase of fatal accidents. But in 1930, and to date due to the club's work with children, there has been a downward trend for the first time in the history of the state. This was the second year after the school program was presented by the club. This contest is having children draw and sketch street dangers should aid materially in making a child safety conscious."

FORESTRY ASSOCIATION STUDYING DEER HERDS

Will Send Out Questionnaires Soon to Obtain Information

Questionnaires for statewide mail survey of members of the Michigan Forestry Association on the deer situation in the state are being prepared at Lansing.

Prof. Paul A. Herbert, of the forestry department at Michigan State College, has drawn up a list of questions dealing with the over-population of deer, how to care for them in sub-zero weather and the shooting of does, to be dispatched to more than 750 members of the association.

The questionnaire includes the following:

1—Do you believe there is over-browsing by deer, or not?

2—Do you approve shooting of does where conservation department decides areas are over-stocked?

3—Are you opposed to the shooting of does even if the conservation department decides areas are over-stocked?

4—Do you favor a one deer law rather than a one buck law because so many does are shot and left in the woods?

5—Should the conservation department feed artificially (hay or browse) temporarily fencing deer out of over-grazed yards until they can be restocked naturally or artificially with browse plants, regardless of cost?

6—How should over population of deer be handled if not by public hunting?

BOUNTY TRAPPING IS PROVING BEST

Conservation Department Reports Lower Cost on Predators Taken

Bounties paid by the state last year on Michigan's major predators—wolves, coyotes and bobcats—averaged less than $8 a head, much lower than the average cost per predator during any year of the state trapper system.

Bounties were paid during 1935 on 4,187 different species of predators, the cost totalling $32,292.01. This averages $7.71 per head. Under the state trapper system the average annual cost varied from $22.25 to $55.70 per predator.

The bounty system has proved more effective at a lower average cost in reducing the number of predators in Michigan than the state-trapper system, but it appears evident that the predator supply is still sufficient to produce another heavy take for bounty hunters.

Michigan Deer Larger

Five species of the whitetailed deer are recognized. One of the most widespread of these is the Virginia deer. To this species belongs the northern whitetailed deer, the form found in Michigan and neighboring areas. The division between the typical Virginia whitetail deer and the northern form occurs in eastern Pennsylvania and southern New York. Besides being larger, the northern whitetail has a heavier coat and is much grayer in winter.

COL. KNOX WOOS MICHIGAN

Many active Detroit opponents of the Roosevelt New Deal, including Republican politicians interested in the Republican presidential nomination, became better acquainted with the Col. Frank Knox of present times during his visit here Wednesday.

At Lansing, Thursday, before the Michigan Press Association, he was introduced to editors of the newspapers in the state's smaller cities. They wield power in politics.

The Chicago publisher displayed all the vigor in which he challenges the New Deal and virtually all its works. In the speeches and in his personal contacts and conferences, his breezy directness was frankly addressed in the "go-getter" fashion to the advancement of his presidential candidacy.

His visits in the state emphasized the importance often, in national conventions, of state delegations' second choices. If Senator Vandenberg does not become a candidate or if he does and it turns out that he can not be nominated, Col. Knox hopes the Michigan delegates will consider him favorably. He offered more than the usual claims of a nutional figure upon the interested consideration of Michigan Republicans. Thirty of his 62 years lived actively in Michigan, with a participation in progressive Republican politics included, of course were not overlooked as a good claim upon the next thing to Michigan citizenship.

Probably the substance is that Col. Knox's welcome in his former home state in a way touches the plan to send an uninstructed delegation to Cleveland. "Uninstructed" will mean, we think, the absence of any committals to either first or second choices.—Detroit News.

TAKE NO CHANCES

Michigan medical authorities estimate that common colds will cost the American public about $100,000,000 during the first three months of this year. They place the probable number of deaths resulting directly or indirectly from the colds at 50,000. More than two million wage-earners will be ill for an average period of at least a week from colds and their aftermath, tonsilitis, bronchitis, pleurisy, and pneumonia. Most people regard the common cold as a mere inconvenience or a sensonal nuisance. Actually it is one of the most dangerous maladies we, in the temperate zone, experience. Physicians and scientists recognize this fact. But their preventative efforts against this disease have not made much headway. We have a saying that what cannot be cured must be endured. The only way we can decrease the ravages of the common cold is to be more careful in our endurance. It is from the ranks of men and women who treat this ailment too lightly that death claims those many thousands of persons. The old-fashioned family doctor still gives the best of advice for this malady when he says: "Go to bed at the first sign of a cold and stay there!" This is the quickest, safest, surest cure.

AMERICA'S RIDDLE

A count of electrical appliances in American homes discloses that only 48.1 per cent of the homes wired for electricity have vacuum cleaners, only 29.3 per cent have refrigerators, only 46 per cent have washers and only 4.4 per cent have ironers. Electricity itself is as yet available to but very few farm homes, while a good many village, town and city homes are still unwired for it.

It is plain that a great potential demand exists for these conveniences, prized by every housewife, such a demand as would create employment for a great body of workers if it became kinetic. There are similar possibilities of demand for such smaller appliances as coffee pots, toasters, grids, heating pads, curling irons and numerous others.

There is prospect for awakening some of this latent demand into activity in the rural electrification program now in progress. A large part, however, of this possible demand awaits the creation of consumer purchasing power. A large part of the population to whom electricity is available is unable to make the fullest use of it because of lack of means.

There are thousands of other things, unconnected with electricity, which people want, things which add to the comfort and convenience of living, many coming into such common use as to be regarded almost as necessities. Every survey of potential demand shows possibilities far beyond the ability of present productive capacity to meet within a reasonable time.

On the other hand there are millions of idle men and women who would like nothing better than to be put to work producing some of these much-wanted things and in their turn becoming consumers of them.

This is America's riddle of the sphinx, that so many people should be reduced to thumb-twiddling and distress when there is so much for them to do.—Omaha World Herald.

Feed your feathered friends.

OLD AGE PROTECTION

To our mind the outstanding feature of the Townsend Plan and the one which should commend itself most highly to the public is the fact that through its discussion attention has been focused more than ever before upon our duty to care for the aged. More than that, it has called to the mind of our youth that they, too, will join the class of the aged within a relatively short span of years, and that it is their duty to make provision against that day.

Both of these ideas are as old as civilization and older, but they require constant re-emphasis.

Whether our responsibility for the care of the needy people of advancing years is met through some adaptation of the Townsend Plan or through some other more time-tried plan, the Nation will owe a genuine debt of gratitude to the men who have brought us to a realization of our previous neglect of the older generation. And, if it will encourage the younger elements of our population to practice the virtue of thrift, and stimulate their interest in providing for their own future, so much the better, whether that be done through the established agencies of savings accounts, prudent investments, and life insurance or by some other workable plan.

The controversy which rages wherever Townsendism is discussed does not center around these admittedly desirable objectives. It arises because a large and distinguished group of authorities deny on the one hand that the plan as proposed will actually produce the results claimed, and assert, on the other hand that it would work terrible hardships on the entire population both old and young.

SHOULD BE CURBED

An inspection of a number of weekly news-papers each week convinces the writer that a racket is being worked on communities of 1,000 and up that should be curbed. We refer to the cheap little "producing companies" who get together a few costumes, "drill" a few immature girls and send them out with the costumes to put on a "home talent play," of more or less original merit. A contract is made with some civic organization to sponsor the production for a percentage small enough so there is seldom any net profit to the organization, and if there is a profit, it is usually dwarfed by the work required of the home folks to help secure a cast and stage the show. These "productions" always require a large cast on the theory that the more home people take part in it, the larger will be the audience. Seldom if ever is a sufficient time allotted for rehearsal—get the production over with as soon as possible and go on to the next town, is the objective of the producing company and its director. Occasionally a good producing company comes along, but that is the exception. There are numerous others who make a regular racket out of the business. Careful consideration should be given by any organization or committee on which attempt is made to "high pressure" a contract for sponsoring productions such as we have in mind. In most cases they could secure much more money, and get it easier, by a frank appeal to the public for funds.

THE INEVITABLE

"If capitalism is going to insist upon a code of conduct free from all principles of fair and honest dealing, if it is going to insist that the creed of the underworld, where cunning and deceit and ruthlessness and finally extermination are recognized as the law of life, shall be and must be the rule of capitalism, we must be prepared to meet the question of state Socialism or even Communism. I venture to prophesy that the people will not indefinitely permit private interests to fix prices either directly or indirectly. If they are to be fixed they will be fixed by public authority. If capitalism has nothing to say in the way of a more equitable distribution of the earnings of capitalism, if it is going to insist that widespread poverty in the midst of incalculable wealth, that denial of comforts and conveniences of the modern world for the majority of the people are natural and inevitable, then capitalism must be prepared to fight for its very existence."—Senator Leon D. Case in the Watervliet Record.

LIKE SMALL BOYS

The much publicized "Council of Moderation" has slipped its moorings and is no more. Sponsored by such notables as John D. Rockefeller, Edsel B. Ford and Everett Colby the Council split on the debatable question of whether it would advocate total abstinence or temperance in the use of intoxicants. Apparently those comprising the personnel of the Council overlooked what should have been the main objective—the effect of alcohol on the human system. That would have been a field with sufficient scope to have offered a real challenge to every man and woman opposed to intemperance. By disbanding following the first rift in the program the Council members took on the status of small boys who refuse to go on with the game unless played under their own rules. Both temper and judgment should have been modified to meet the issue without throwing the entire movement into the discard because of pique.

WILL CONTINUE FREE

As the Republican party of another generation, under Abraham Lincoln, fought for freedom and an undivided nation, as the Republican party under William McKinley fought the unsound policies of William Jennings Bryan in 1896 and again in 1900, so shall we of the Republican party of today take the leadership in retaining for the American people their own liberties.

I have said it will be a hard fight—and so it will be—but I have every confidence that next November the American people will demonstrate that they intend to continue in a democratic form of government — that they are determined to remain a free people, living in the United States of America. — Col. DAIRYMEN OBJECT

The dairy interests are protesting the administration's plan to resurrect the AAA in the name of soil conservation. They claim the latest scheme to stabilize farm prices would encourage farmers to sow "submarginal" lands retired from wheat, corn, and cotton production to grass or legumes, which certainly would not be allowed to go to waste, but would, instead, be fed to cows. To use this surplus new dairy herds would be developed and that, say the dairymen, would inevitably increase the surplus of milk products and so undermine dairy prices. Since the time President Hoover was stampeded into calling a special session of Congress to form the Farm Administration Board the farm problem has moved swiftly from one phase to another. The taxpayers of the nation have been called upon to furnish millions of dollars to finance a number of costly experiments in price-fixing, yet today the problem of putting the farm industry on a profitable basis is as enigmatic as during the Hoover administration. What is needed is some non-partisan plan which will guarantee a fair return to the farmer without impoverishing further the great middle classes who pay most of the government bills. General Corn Wallace ought to know the answer by this time.

"I'll not go see him," Tony declared. Not she knew in her heart that she would. She was already devoured with fear, regret, homesickness.

* * * * * * * *

The next day passed in dreamy unreality. There was no word from the Call. Tony felt aimless; life was quiet and flat. She went down to the newspaper's business office and asked, hoping that the answer would be in the negative, for her pay envelope. It was there; a whole week's pay, and no comment no letter. Going upstairs with a fast-beating heart at four o'clock Tony found Greeny at his desk—extremely regretful, but apparently willing to accept her resignation. She said good-by to him and to such men as were there, left messages; the whole thing was miserably unsatisfying.

Out in Market street again Tony considered going to the other newspapers; there seemed to be nothing else to do. In both places she had brief unsatisfactory conversations with superior and uninterested city editors; there were no vacancies at the moment.

She walked home somewhat depressed. The city was full of men and women who had held newspaper jobs and who had lost them.

The next day she washed her hair and put her bureau in order. Then she went to the Cutler funeral with Aunt Meggy, and they walked home with Aunt Sally. She left Aunt Meggy there for dinner, and went home to find that Clifford was dining with his girl's family for the first time, a great occasion for Cliff.

"I want to tip you off," Cliff said, tying his white tie. "It's going to be Mary Rose Illy. Fixed it up Sunday."

"Clifford Taft! Oh, I am glad!" Tony exulted, getting up to kiss him. "You would pick a girl with money."

"She hasn't got so much money," Cliff smiled at himself in the glass; life was going well with him, with all the Tafts. "We're sitting pretty!"

She and Bruce had a quiet dinner and he went early to bed. Tony thought that she would put out the lamps and sit and look out at the roofs and at Twin Peaks washed in moonshine, and wait for Aunt Meg to come home.

The bell rang sharply; the hall bell. Tony went to the door. And it was Larry Bellamy who stood there.

"Tony!" he said. "I want to see you. May I come in?"

"Come in," she said, her heart rising on a great bound of joy and hope.

Larry flung aside his cap and coat and sat down, drawing his chair close to hers as he did so, catching both her hands in his big cold ones.

"Tony, what's all this about? I'm just in. Ruth and I flew up by airplane this afternoon. Down at the office they're all upset over this. Greeny was tearing his hair. What happened? My dear, my dear, you can't run out on us like that!"

It was heaven, after these endless lonely days, to have him here beside her, warm and brown and eager and affectionate, to realize that she had made her mark as a newspaper woman after all.

He listened to the whole story attentively as she poured it out, taking it step by step.

"Larry, was that fair? Was that decent? To let me drag Miss Wallace into it, poor thing—she was fighting every step of the way—and then to tell me that I'd made her betray her boss?"

"No, it was rotten," Larry said briefly, as she paused.

"And then that smug pig of a Fitch!" Tony stormed on bitterly. "How dares he—how dares he involve me in his dirty tricks!"

"I agree with you," said Larry. "But you can't give up your job on his account." That'd be to honor him too much. Tony, don't be a fool about this," Larry pleaded. "You've got a good job and a good chance with us. Fitch may be out any day; nobody else knows that, so keep it under your hat. Now, you cool down, and I'll straighten it all out. Greeny's mad with excitement over the whole thing; he a sport now, Tony, and don't throw us all down just because—"

Tony had walked to the window. She was thrilled beyond all her wildest dreams and hopes by Larry's loneliness and consternation at the mere idea that she could resign. But whenever the memory of the complacent and suave Fitch revived her pride rose again.

"It's my honor, Larry!" she said, with trembling lips.

He was standing at the window beside her, and as she raised her heavy, brooding eyes they met his.

"I've never seen you like this, Tony," Larry said gently.

"I'm not often like this."

"Come back, Tony," he said. There was a silence.

"Oh, I want to come back, Larry!" she confessed, on a long sigh, without turning her head. For a minute they stood looking out together at the jumbled blur of red and gold lights that were the city.

Then suddenly Larry's arms were about her, and Tony's heart leaped as if it would burst its bounds; the familiar room in the mild lamplight was rocking dizzily; and all thought was gone, and all reason. There were only the swimming madness of her senses, and the touch of him, the sound of his voice low and quick and incoherent in her ear.

"I'm human, you know," Larry said, breathless. "I'm — I'm human. My beautiful girl—my beautiful—beautiful Tony!"

Drinking deep—of the wine too strong for human souls and hearts to bear, Tony rested her cheek against his own hard cheek, locked her slender arm about his neck, and murmured only his name, over and over again: "Larry, Larry, Larry."

And for a while that was enough. Presently she said:

"When did you know?"

"I've always known."

"And you knew how I felt?"

"I suspected, I suppose."

"You didn't have to suspect; I told you. I went blubbering up to your office and practically made you offers of marriage. Bendy's wedding day, remember?"

"Remember? My God, what do you think I'm made of? Every minute of that talk we had was like whips—like fire—"

There was a long silence of complete ecstasy; they murmured again, and again his lips were hard against hers.

"Larry."

"Tony."

"Where do we go from here?"

He did not answer. She felt his lips against her hair.

CHAPTER XIX

In Ruth's lovely drawing room the shades had been drawn against the hot spring sunlight that was deceeding in the west; the tea table had been placed at the north windows that opened on the little awninged balcony. When Tony arrived there were only two persons in the room: Ruth and the marvelous Mrs. Polhemus. Ruth was in rather a fussy blue silk, with the permanent wave in her hair still a little too accurate and too fresh; Mrs. Polhemus was in a plain sport frock of lemon yellow, with pale corals in her ears and about her throat. She was younger than Ruth, not more than thirty, handsome and dark and striking, with coral lips and black shining hair and an ivory skin.

"Oh, just ourselves?" Tony said smilingly, as she was introduced. "I thought it was a party!"

"It was going to be," Ruth said, raising her face for Tony's kiss. "But now it's just Caroline and Joe and you and me."

"Joe?" Tony echoed, pleased.

"My brother, you know," Caroline Polhemus said.

"Of course! I'd forgotten." Tony sat down in a basket chair, pulling a little, and said, "This is country weather."

"We're showing Caroline Del Monte tomorrow."

"Ah, you'll love it. I'm going down Sunday to see my sister and the baby, and for Joe's housewarming, of course!"

"We'll see you, then. You couldn't dine with us at the hotel on Sunday night?"

"Ruth, I'd love it. But I'll tell you, I don't know just how I'll find things at Bendy's. She has no nurse, and she may have made some plan—"

It didn't sound extremely convincing, and Tony had an idea that Caroline Polhemus was looking right through her. But Ruth only said unsuspectingly:

"Well, come if you can."

"This is extraordinary weather for San Francisco," Tony told the Eastern woman.

"This wouldn't be warm in a New York June."

"I hear my perfectly good husband called on you the night we got back from Los Angeles last week," said Ruth.

"Well, Come If You Can."

"Not last week, the week before," Tony smiled at the long cold glass of iced tea in her hand. "I resigned from the Call in a tantrum," she explained, "and Larry came and cleared it up."

"She certainly is beautiful," Caroline Polhemus thought. "I wonder if she's always so nervous. She was as pale as a ghost when she came in, and now she's got high color, blue eyes and that dark hair — but, of course, it's the shape of the face, and the big mouth and big teeth—either beautiful or homely, I would say, and certainly beautiful this afternoon. —I do beg your pardon, I'm sorry!" she interrupted her thoughts to apologize, finding Tony's eyes fixed on her expectantly. "I didn't hear what you were saying, Miss Taft. I think," Caroline went on, smiling, "I think I was trying to fit you to all the pictures my brother has been drawing of you in his letters," she said.

"Joe is — enthusiastic," Tony observed. And her color was high enough now, and her eyes self-conscious.

"Why doesn't she love Joe?" the visitor speculated, as Tony and Ruth began a little murmured conversation of their own. Ruth was saying several times stubbornly: "No, but you could run in for a few minutes—I know, but you could have telephoned — I know, but it's been days now. Do you realize I've seen you exactly twice since we came back from Los Angeles, and both times that was just a flying call in the morning?" and Tony answering: "Honestly, it's terribly hard, Ruth. Late afternoons there seems always to be some stupid thing, a club date or a tea, or something—I will—yes, truly I will—I won't have to work so hard now."

"And I ought to be going this moment," Tony finished, putting down her empty glass. She stood up. "I'll see you positively at the housewarming, and maybe Sunday?" she was saying, when Joe Vonderwall came in. Tony's eyes went to the door; her color wavered.

He kissed his sister; kissed Ruth.

"What's the rush, Tony?"

"No rush. But I've been here half an hour, and I'm supposedly doing the duff on the loan exhibition."

"Is it any good, Tony? Oh, sit down again, nothing will be going on there until half-past five, and it's just five now."

"They say it's good." Tony took her chair again; a slender figure in a white suit, with a white hat and white shoes.

The door clicked, and again her breath rose suffocatingly against her heart. It was old Mrs. Patterson. No escape for another ten minutes now.

Mrs. Patterson took Tony's chair, and Tony sat on a straw hassock in the opened window, and there was more tea.

"When do you sail, Mrs. Polhemus?"

"I was sailing on the sixth, on the Empress of Japan. But now I'm trying to persuade Ruth to go with me, and I'd wait over a boat for her."

"Ruth, why not?" her mother asked, surprised and interested.

CHILDREN ENJOY DRESSING SELVES

Process May Be Pleasant If Proper Guidance Is Offered

Dressing, for a child under school age, may be either a pleasant experience or a disagreeable task, depending on the attitude of the parent, say home economics experts at Michigan State College.

Children even three years old will enjoy washing if they have their own small wash racks, their own cloth and towel, and a box or stool on which to stand while washing. Likewise, they will enjoy undressing and dressing if they have their own hanger for their clothes, and are taught to lay their clothing out in proper order.

A three-year old must not, however, be expected to carry through the entire process of dressing. It is enough that, encouraged by the parent, he attempts to remove simple garments, and to discover the proper order of putting on clothing. Even if the youngster does appear slow and awkward, he must be allowed sufficient time to do these things for himself.

A shoe that does not go on easily, although a mere tug to the parent, is a problem to a struggling three-year old, and no child should be faced with the problem of a hard knot or tying a bow knot until he is five or six. Furthermore, if clothing is in good repair and fits, the child will find undressing and dressing a much pleasanter experience than if he has to struggle with buttons that are too large for the button holes, or with safety pins where buttons should be.

It is not asking too much of a child to look to him to take his clothing from the lower drawers in chests, although the selection of the day's garments is too much to expect.

Finally, as the child gains proficiency in undressing and dressing, a race with daddy or mother will help to speed up the process, but winning the race should not overshadow thoroughness in washing, brushing the teeth, or brushing the hair. Neatness, as well as speed, should be the goal.

* SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS By Ann Page *
* * * * * * * * * * *

The same weather conditions which made for a temporary shortage of fresh produce and slightly higher prices last week have continued and the higher prices with them, though there are many excellent values available in vegetables.

New cabbage, spinach, broccoli, peas, and bunch beets and carrots together with the typical winter vegetables are all inexpensive.

Beef and lamb offer the best meat values while pork is higher. Egg, milk and butter production are somewhat reduced. Evaporated milk is an excellent and economical food which helps to make many good dishes better.

The citrus fruits are now at their best, sweet, juicy and full of flavor.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (I John 3:9): "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 311): "Soul is immortal because it is Spirit, which has no element of self-destruction. ..... It is a sense of sin, and not a sinful soul, which is lost. Evil is destroyed by the sense of good."

STATE OF MICHIGAN

To the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix in Chancery:

The petition of John J. O'Hara, Auditor General of the State of Michigan, for and in behalf of said State, respectfully shows that the list of lands hereinafter set forth and marked "Schedule A," contains a description of all lands in said County of Charlevoix upon which taxes were assessed for the years mentioned therein, and which were returned as delinquent for non-payment of taxes, and which taxes have not been paid; together with the total amount of such taxes, with interest computed thereon to the time fixed for sale, and collection fee and expenses, as provided by law, extended against each of said parcels of land.

Your petitioner further shows to the Court that said lands were returned to the Auditor General under the provisions of Act 206 of the Public Acts of 1893, as delinquent for non-payment of said taxes for said years respectively, and that said taxes remain unpaid; except that lands included in said "Schedule A" for taxes of 1890 or prior years were returned to the Auditor General as delinquent for said taxes under the provisions of the general tax laws in force prior to the passage of Act 200 of the Public Acts of 1891, and which taxes remain unpaid.

Your petitioner further shows that in all cases where lands are included in "Schedule A" as aforesaid for taxes of 1890 or of any prior year, said lands have not been sold for said taxes or have been heretofore sold for said delinquent taxes and the sale or sales so made have been set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction, or have been cancelled as provided by law.

Your petitioner further shows that in all cases where lands are included in "Schedule A," as aforesaid, for the first instalment of taxes of 1932, or of any prior year, said lands have not been sold for said taxes or have been heretofore sold for delinquent taxes and the sale, or sales, so made have been set aside by court of competent jurisdiction by Legislative Action (See Act 126, P. A. of 1933, as amended by Act 11, Extra Session of 1934, as amended by Act 73, P. A. of 1935), or have been cancelled as provided by law.

Your petitioner further shows and avers that the taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses as set forth in said "Schedule A," are a valid lien on the several parcels of lands described in said schedule.

Your petitioner further shows that the said taxes on the said described lands have remained unpaid for more than one year after they were returned as delinquent; and the said taxes not having been paid, and the same being now due and remaining unpaid as above set forth, your petitioner prays a decree in favor of the State of Michigan against each parcel of said lands, for the payment of the several amounts of taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses, as computed and extended in said schedule against the several parcels of land contained therein, and in default of payment of the said several sums computed and extended against said lands, that each of said parcels of land may be sold for the amounts due thereon, as provided by law, to pay the lien aforesaid.

And your petitioner will ever pray, etc.,

FORECAST RISING RURAL INCOMES

Farmers Asked to Write for Copies "Agricultural Outlook for 1936"

Improvement in the position of Michigan farmers for 1936 is forecast in a series of economic studies on Michigan agricultural situation.

Detailed analysis of the important divisions in the livestock, fruit, truck gardening, and grain fields, together with surveys of recent and probable future trends, indicate what developments might be expected for state agriculture in the coming year.

Declines are anticipated in the price of such farm costs as feeds, fertilizers, and some seeds. No significant changes are expected in the prices of farm machinery and building materials. While farm wages will advance, according to the studies, favorable farm prices will be rising much faster than farm costs.

Increased consumer demands combined with continued good prices in livestock promise to increase the cash income and to make 1936 the second successive year in which farm prices have swung upwards. Elimination of the depression disparity between agricultural and non-farm prices will he almost completely eliminated, it is expected.

Summaries of these studies are included in the latest issue of the Agricultural Econmoic News for Michigan, published at Michigan State College, East Lansing. Copies may be had by writing for the seventh issue to the Bulletin Department at the college. The issue is known as the Agricultural Outlook for 1936.

Among the specific forecasts made are the following:

The demand for horses will be strong for the next three to tive years with colts and young mares suitable for both breeding and heavy work leading the market.

Dairy products prices will remain favorable partly because of the reduction in dairy animals through disease eradication programs. Poultry products will be profitable because of low feed costs and shortage of poultry supplies. High lamb and wool prices will continue for 1936 because of the low quuntity in 1935.

Hog and beef cattle prices will be maintained for the first six months, when prices will be afferted by increased production ready for the market.

With acerage crops, Michigan truck gardeners should do better than last year. Celery, onions, and tomatoes are due for acreage reductions. Canning companies are ordering increased acreage especially for tomatoes.

Sugar beet prices are uncertain partly because of the illegality of the processing tax. Potato prices should rise while the acreage will remain the same as in 1935. Increased acreage of wheat will depress the price. A carryover of two and a half million bags of Michigan beans will also depress bean prices. Increased consumer purchasing power will increase sales of fruit but local conditions and carryovers from 1935 will definitely affect the price.

WRITERS' PROJECT IS SEEKING LOCAL DATA

Mrs. Geo. D. Wood Assembling Material for The American Guide

Included among the projects of the Professional and Service Projects Division of the Works Progress Administration, are the Writers' Projects. The most important of these is the project known as The American Guide.

The American Guide, to be published by the government in five regional volumes, is designed to meet the need of a comprehensive guide to the United States, arranged by states, cities and counties. Its purpose is to provide residents of communities, tourists, students, authors and research workers with an inclusive picture of the scenic, historical, cultural, recreational, economic, aesthetic, commercial and industrial resources of the country; with (1) information that is not now readily available or is scattered in various sources; (2) an understanding of the native and folk backgrounds of rural localities; and (3) a convenient and compact series of reference books for tours, sightseeing and investigation of notable landmarks, objects of interest, fictional association or other data of value to citizens throughout the country.

Since it will supplement but not supersede road guides and other private publications, it is non-competitive and non-commercial. In its general scope, it is intended to be of service to all private tour agencies, public carriers, local and national associations having to do with the conservation of historic monuments, natural beauties, chambers of commerce and civic bodies, recreational clubs and societies and all enterprises, public and private, which minister to the varied interests of the general public.

Anybody who is interested in preserving a record of the history and culture of his community, kindly communicate with Mrs. George D. Wood, field representative of the Federal Writers' Project, either at the Information Bureau or 406 West Hurlbut. Any information concerning the early history of Charlevoix county, interesting anecdotes or pictures, will be appreciated.

AT THE MOVIES

"Captain Blood" and His Pirates at Palace

Rafael Sabatini's famous and colorful story of romance and adventure, "Captain Blood," which Cosmopolitan Productions has filmed on a gigantic scale, comes to the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday, February 15-16, as a First National release.

This thrilling tale of seventeenth century sea pirates is said to be one of the most elaborate and pretentious productions in screen history. Tremendous settings were designed by master builders.

Horton Acts Timid Soul In "Your Uncle Dudley"

In the role of a small-town booster who was nice to everyone but himself, Edward Everett Horton offers a delightful variant on his recent screen roles as the star of the Fox comedy, "Your Uncle Dudley," which comes Wednesday and Thursday, Februnry 19-20, to the Palace Theatre.

It is Horton's fate, in this picture, to he one of those people who are always so involved in civic affairs that they have no time or energy left to live their own life.

For a time silver loving cups and adulation feed his vanity, but soon he begins to look for something more substantial.

With his business falling off, his girl friend threatening to walk out and his parasitic sister clamoring for money, Horton takes stock of himself and decides to change his course.

What happens when this new personality bursts on this horizon is revealed in the chuckle-filled climax of the picture, and in its happy romantic close.

Lois Wilson is the charmer cast opposite Horton, with John McGuire and Rosina Lawrence the principals in a minor romance. Directed by Eugene Forde, "Your Uncle Dudley" features Alan Dinehart and Marjorie Gateson in the chief supporting roles.

CREDIT ASSOCIATION CHOSE NEW DIRECTORS

Annual Meeting Gaylord Association Held on January 29th

The annual meeting of the Gaylord Production Credit Association was held in Gaylord on Jauuary 29th.

One of the chief activities of the association was the election of three directors, in which only members of the association participated. Those elected were Roy Anderson, of Alba, Frank Sluyter, of Petoskey, and H. L. Ostrander, of Afton. Mr. Anderson and Mr. Sluyter were re-elected, and Mr. Ostrander is a new member of the board.

Following the stockholders' meeting, the new board of directors went into session and chose the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Roy Anderson; vice-president, Charles Shepard; secretary-treasurer, A. J. Townsend.

Those attending the meeting showed keen interest in the fact that this association has been organized along permunent business lines to furnish credit to farmers on a sound basis for carrying on their seasonal farming operations. Loans for making repairs or improvements to buildings, for paying up debts due to farm production, and for buying harness, horses, tructors, cattle or lambs are among the purposes for which members may borrow funds, as shown by the speakers.

A better understanding of the way in which the association gets the money it lends, and the responsibilities of members to each other resulted from the discussion of E. A. Boie, representing the Production Credit Corporation of St. Paul. This is the regional organization that supervises this and 76 other similar associations in four states. Mr. Boie made it clear that the association is coopertive and is designed to be controlled by the furmers who are stockholders. The renson for requiring that every borrower become a member and a voting stockholder in the association is to keep control of it in the hands of the farmers who are using it, he said, and to insure that all profits from operations will be used to create necessary reserves and to reduce interest costs.

TAX DEADLINE LIMIT IS EXTENDED AGAIN

Set Ahead to February 29—Report on City Taking Over Golf Course

Taxpayers were given another extension on time of payment of winter taxes without penalty by action of the city council Monday night. The deadline, previously extended to January 31, was advunced to February 29.

A report on the matter of taking the Charlevoix Golf Club course over for operation and management as a municipal course was given by the Kiwanis committee composed of Robert Bridge, chairman; Dr. R. B. Armstrong and Otto Krueger. The committee's recommendation that the city take the course over was held without action until further investigation of proposal is made. Another report of the joint Kiwanis and council committees will be made at the next council meeting.

Edgar Behrens' appointment hy Mayor L. P. Adams as special policeman at the Grant street coasting hill was confirmed hy the council.

GOVERNOR FITZGERALD SPEAKS ON LIQUOR

Recently when the governor issued a report of his first year's stewardship, he gave his opinion about the liquor business in no uncertain terms. Following are his words:

"I have for a long time held to the belief the state has no good excuse for being in the beer and whiskey trade. To properly regulate the traffic, and to exact from it a fair revenue should be the state's only connection. It would have its hands full doing that much.

"The liquor business is and always had been londed with dynamite. It has bred more scandal than any other line of commercial uctivity. It is a trouble maker by nature, despite the efforts of many conscientious men in the business who desire it kept in clean hands.

"The situation is made infinitely worse when the liquor traffic is placed under political domination, and that is what has been done in Michigan. The union between whiskey and politics, once condemned as an unholy alliance, has been made legitimate.

"The mad pursuit of easy money in the liquor trade has led to some desperate situations, in which wild and unfounded criticism has been resorted to by those whose greed for the almighty dollar was not satisfied."

What's in the Bottle?

IF it's a bottle of medicine, you can't tell what's inside (except that it's probably something bitter!). You must trust your druggist—trust that he has followed your doctor's orders—trust that he has used only fresh drugs of the highest grade.

YOUR own doctor will tell you that we are worthy of this trust. When you have a prescription filled here, you don't have to wonder "what's in the bottle."

ABOVE all, you must have faith that he has compounded your prescription properly, for unlike recipes, they rarely state how the ingredients should be mixed.

FUNERALS HELD FOR ICE VICTIMS

CITY PAUSES IN RESPECT TO DEPARTED MEN

Brown, Suvivor of Tragedy, Recovering at Charlevoix Hospital—Citizens Aid Families

Charlevoix has pnid its last respects to the two victims of the worst winter ice trngedy in its history.

Services for Earl Cunninghnm, coast guard who gave his life in a valiant effort to save his fellow men, were conducted Friday afternoon from the Congregational church. The body was taken to Afton for services Saturday, and burial was the same afternoon at Wolverlne.

Funeral for Claude Beurdsley, the second victim, was held Saturdny afternoon at the Buptist church.

Earl Cunningham

Earl Cunningham was born December 16, 1895, at Detroit, the son of George W. and Ann Cunningham. He moved with his parents to Afton at the age of 26. He joined the army during the World War, serving from June 24, 1917, to August 8, 1918, during which time he spent 11 months in Frunce. On October 31, 1921, he married Helen Teatro at Afton. He joined the coast guurd service July 13, 1928, and was stationed ut Hammond's Bay on Luke Huron until transferred to Charlevoix on September 20, 1935.

Surviving besides the widow are three sons, Richard 10, Herbert 6, and Wnyne 5; his parents, seven sisters and a brother.

Members of the Masons, Odd Fellows and American Legion, with which organizutions Cunningham was affiliated, attended the services in a body. Legionnaires accompanied the remains to Afton.

Claude Beardsley

Claude Beardsley wus born April 24, 1884, in Lnpeer county. He spent the greater part of his life in Northern Michigan, coming here 10 years ago from Levering and following the occupation of painting and decorating.

He married Miss Maude Lothrop in Lapeer county. Surviving him are the widow and three children, Mrs. Clayton Brown and Beutrice at home; Cleo, of Miami, Fla.; his parents, Mr. und Mrs. Jerome Beardsley, of Grand Rapids; three brothers, William, of Flint, Roy, of Lansing, und Earl, of Grand Rapids; two sisters, Mrs. Ethel Snyder, of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. Myrtle Miller, of Lansing; also two grandchildren.

Brown Shows Improvement

Clayton Brown, survivor of the tragedy, is showing steudy improvement at Charlevoix Hospital. His general condition is greatly improved. Whether he will lose his feet, badly frozen when he staggered and crawled 14 miles over ice floes to Goodhart, is a matter of conjecture. Dr. R. B. Armstrong and son, Dr. Bruce Armstrong, attending physicians, are noncommltal.

Citizens Aid Families

Charlevoix citizens have responded generously with financial aid for the fumilies of Brown and Beurdsley, left in strnightened circumstances by the tragedy. Funds solicited under the direction of Sheriff Floyd W. Ikens have been turned over to them. Contributions have been received from Mrs. Marie Heaton, of Detroit, Belvedere summer resident, and Mrs. A. Larson, of Hermansville, Mich. Contributions from local and out-of-town persons will be gladly accepted and acknowledged by Sheriff Ikens for this very worthy euse.

EXPECT SCHOOLS TO BE ACCREDITED

RECENT EXAMINATION RESULTS FAVORABLY

General Conduct of Schools Lauded In Report from State Department of Education

Charlevoix High school was inspected December 14th by Earl E. Mosier, of the State Department of Education, and as u result of the showing it is expected that Charlevoix schools will again be accepted for diploma relationships with the University of Michigan and the North Central Associntion.

The only specific critieisms were in regard to the library location and hiology laboratory. This year, due to biology not having been taught the past three years, 93 people were classified and were accommodated in three classes. This makes time, space and material for much laboratory work impossible. Instead demonstrations, projections, moving pictures, and collecting are used in place of formal laboratory work. Another year the probable size of the biology group will be diminished, making more laboratory work possible.

At the present time books, especially in social sciences, are being added to the school reading room for school use only. A small reference library of high school subjects is gradually being built up, overcoming the criticism of lack of a library in connection with the school plant.

Favorable comments are contained in this quotation: "The Charlevoix school should be commended for its excellent appearance. Your staff of custodians should receive a word of commendation for many indications within the building of good housekeeping. The school board, American Legion, and civic clubs are sponsoring n most worthy project in furnishing hot lunches to the pupils of the school. The continuous accrediting of your high school for the past 34 years is an indication that the citizens of Charlevoix have offered their students excellent training. The supervised recreational activities merit n word of commendation as does the arrangement made for dormitory facilities for non-resident students. Your project for a new junior high school building will add another modern unit to your school plant. One would conclude that the school life in Charlevoix is not being neglected."

CONSERVATION EXHIBIT HERE IN SPRING

Department to Bring Conservation to School Through Trailer Exhibit

As unother step in its program to bring conservation to Michigan schools, the Department of Conservation will begin early this spring to route a large wild life exhibit through every county of the state.

The exhibit will be transported by trailer ear and will remain from one to three days in each community visited. In each instance the assistance of local conservation organizations will be solicited. It is expected thnt the exhibit will be first routed through the western half of the Upper Peninsula and will be ready for n tour through the Southern Peninsuln when schools reopen next September.

ADDITION TO GRADE SCHOOL APPROVED

PROJECT INCLUDES WRECKING JUNIOR HIGH

Extension to Grade Building Will Provide New Quarters for Junior High School Department

D. T. McHugh, sub-district WPA director, has been notified by Richard Lawson, district director, that upproval has been given u project calling for demolition of the junior high school building and an nddition to the present grade building.

Work on the addition, which will be used for junior high school grades, will start as soon us money has been made available, probably within a month, according to Mr. Lawson's letter.

Plans for the extension, prepared by G. Harold Thompson, of Cheboygan, were approved last week by the State Department of Education. The 48-foot addition, though small, will, with the four rooms now availuble in the grade building, provide ndequate quarters for the junior high department.

Out of a total cost of $23,654, the local district is pledged to pay $5,600, und out of this amount cnn be deducted the value of any salvage material in the present junior high building. As this salvnge includes form lumber, brick for backing, lighting and plumbing fixtures, it will be considerable. The material not used will remain the property of the school district.

Money for the district's share of these improvements is on hand, realized through bank payments and unlooked for delinquent taxes collected during the past year.

Bids for material necessary for renovation of the grade building are now being made. As soon as material arrives, work will be started which includes mainly cement floor, walls, plastering unfinished rooms, nnd redecorating the remaining rooms.

The athletic field project has progressed as far as finishing the rough grading of the southwest end of the field and building curb for the quarter mile track. Men and trucks are now hauling gravel filling which later will be covered several inches with cinders now being collected at Cadillac.

Another crew of men is busy at the federal warehouse muking 200 feet of five-foot portable bleachers, somewhat similar to the gymnasium bleachers, to be used at the athletic field. Not much more can be acomplished in addition to the above outlined activities until weather conditions improve.

FARMS IN COUNTY SHOW AN INCREASE

MARKED EXPANSION IN AGRICULTURE SHOWN

Federal Report Reveals Gain In All Departments of Farming Between 1930 and 1935 Census

Increases in farms, crops, cows, horses, and hogs between the census enumerations of 1930 and 1935 indicate n marked expansion for agriculture in Charlevoix county, Michigan, according to the 1935 Federal Farm Census preliminary report released today by Director W. L. Austin, of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce.

Farms increased almost one-third between 1930 and 1935, with 1,342 being reported in 1935. Land in farms increused about 23,000 acres. Land in harvested crops increased over 5,300 acres between 1929 and 1934. Thnt many of the new farms are small in size is indicated by a decline from 102.2 to 95.4 acres in the average size of the farms.

The acreages of corn, wheat, oats, and Irish potatoes were larger in 1934 thnn in 1929. Corn increased about 2,700 acres, wheat about 800 acres, oats about 600 acres, and Irish potatoes about 1,200 acres. Slightly more than one-half the harvested acreages of all crops was used for the production of hay.

The increase in farms and crops was accompanied hy gains in horses, cows, and hogs. Horses increased over 200, cows about 1,800, and hogs about 100. Livestock on January 1, 1935, included 2,120 horses, 2,106 hogs, and 11,479 cattle, of which 6,215 were cows.

The report shows further that, while farms increased in number, their vulue dropped nlong with the general slump in real estate. County farms were valued at $3,618,010 in 1930, while the 1935 figure is set at $3,166,519. The average value per farm slumped from $3,516 to $2,360 and the averuge value per acre from $34.39 to $24.73.

Charlevoix county's potato production jumped from 167,013 bushels in 1930 to 300,212 bushels in 1935.

RAYDERS LOSE TO EAST JORDAN "5"

DROPPED 32 TO 21 DECISION HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

Contest Closest Game Seen on Local Court This Season—Meet Harbor Springs Here Friday

Charlevoix's Red Rayders dropped the most closely contested game seen here this season Friday night, losing 32 to 21 to East Jordan.

Fans who came to see the tussle for second place in the Northern Michigan Class C Conference were well rewarded, for the contest was the best basketball exhibition of the winter.

East Jordan's 11-point margin of victory might indicate a one-sided contest, but it was far from such. Charlevoix emerged from the first quarter with a 7 to 5 lead. Radle, Pearl and Schwab found the meshes for goals and the latter a free toss. East Jordan scored four more points than Chnrlevoix in the second period to gain u 11 to 9 murgin at the half. Both teams marked up eight points in the third stanzu to give the Jordanites a 19 to 17 advantage nt the third intermission.

The next few minutes were as thrilling as a basketball game can produce. Charlevoix evened the count nt 19-all and aguin at 20-all before Jordan pulled away. Pearl nnd Schwab went out on personals and the rout started, resulting in 12 points for the visitors to one for Charlevoix.

Charlevoix's innbility to escape fouling, even though many of them were unintentional, proved their undoing. East Jordnn had no less than 20 chances from the foul line and made good on half of them, enough to win the contest. East Jordan was charged with 12 fouls and Charlevoix capitalized on five of the opportunities.

The score by quarters:

BEAVER ISLAND

A surprise party was given for Mrs. Mary O'Donnell on February 12, her birthday. A very enjoyable evening was spent and luncheon was served.

The Valentine party given by the high school was a success. There was card playing, raffling on wheel, dancing, and a nice luncheon was served. Everybody enjoyed the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. James O'Donnell announce the engagement of their daughter, Beatrice, to Jack Boyne. A shower is being held in the bride-elect's honor, at the home of Mr. Boyne's sister, Mrs. James W. Gallagher.

We were glad to get news about Clayton Brown being saved. Our sympathy goes to relatives of Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Beardsley, who perished on Lake Michigan. Everyone tuned in on their radios to get news of the tragedy. We all join in wishing Mr. Brown a speedy recovery.

The sympathy of the entire community of Beaver Island is hereby extended to the bereaved families and friends of the men who were unfortunate in losing their lives on an ice floe last week. We pray that Divine Providence may assuage the anguish of their bereavement and leave only the cherished memory of the loved and lost.

Valentine Party at St. James

The Valentine card party given in the auditorium by St. James High school, and sponsored by the Seniors on Friday evening, February 14th, was a decided success both socially and financially. The decorations in the hall and on the "tally cards" consisted of hearts, large and small, to carry out the "Valentine" scheme.

First prizes were carried off by John Ricksgers, Mrs. Joseph Sendenbergh and Malvina Connaghnn. Second prizes were captured by Mrs. Francis Gillespie, William Schmidt and Leo Gallagher. Jack Connaghnn won the "door" prize.

During the evening the young people's orchestra entertained the appreciative crowd with very excellent music.

Much credit is due the high school pupils for the systematic way they served the refreshments to over 450 people.

William Shapton has been quite ill for the last few days, and is reported better at the present writing.

Owing to bad roads no church services have been held in either of the Barnard churches for the past few weeks.

Here's hoping that in a month or so, we will be able to find more news for our column, for with all meetings postponed and no roads to go on to visit, there isn't much doing.

NORWOOD

(Delayed last week)

Oscar Light for the past few days has been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Light, in Norwood.

Mrs. Robert Holecheck and her two weeks old son, Erwin Gene, arrived home from the Charlevoix Hospital Saturday afternoon.

Miss Marjorie Richardson went to Charlevoix last Friday, where she is employed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fochlman on Dixon avenue.

Dr. McMillan, of Charlevoix, made a visit to the Frank Richardson home Sunday afternoon, where Mrs. Richardson is ill. Mrs. Richardson is improving in health.

Residents of Norwood and vicinity were marooned for some time last week, on account of the snow storm which swept across the country. The snow plow opened the road Saturday for only about three hours, the storm raging on and the road was filled in again. Several cars went out while the road was open, but found it quite difficult to get back to their homes again.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

CENTRAL LAKE

(Delayed last week)

Four weeks of blizzard and cold weather has set a new record for Michigan and most of the United States.

Torch Lake and the bay are frozen over solid. Ice in old Torch is about 14 inches thick so far, and clear as crystal.

C. H. Morse visited his brother, Otto, at Bay View last Sunday. O. R. Morse is still on the gain, we are glad to announce.

Road conditions made it impossible for Rev. Rauch to get to Eastport on US-31 last Sunday, and consequently no services were held.

The James Dawson saw mill started up for a small cut of shingles last Thursday after the storm. Perry Carpenter did not go home to Bellaire.

Forest Dewey says they had a very successful 100 per cent credit meeting at Harbor Springs, and that in a year's time it will be in full operation in the United States.

The Walter Anderson family, of Creswell, and Forest Dewey family, of Ellsworth, were callers at the home of John Dawson, in town, and the William McGuire home, at Snowflake, last week.

Mrs. Margaret Watson, who has been blind, owing to an unsuccessful operation on her eyes some years ago, fell last week, bruising her side quite badly. She lives north of town with Robert Watson.

Rev. Guy Liskum has been busy getting out wood and shingle timber this winter. He will get the shingles cut at the Dawson mill. The snow being so deep has made it difficult to work in the woods this winter.

G. A. Morse writes from Florida that at Clearwater, where he is stopping, ice froze an inch thick. Many buildings are empty for want of renters. He saw the Dennis Yettaw people and O. P. Barber family, also Lamereaux's.

Ralph Wynsma was a business visitor in Charlevoix Friday. He walked to Ellsworth and brought back his car that he had repaired, but had to leave it at Morse garage and walk three miles home as the road had not been cleared to Holland church.

Harvey Brouwer was not feeling quite so well last Monday. Walter Lewis, brother of Harry Lewis, is staying with him and doing the chores and hauling wood. Harry Lewis went back to work Monday on the Central Lake-Ellsworth road project. They had stopped work for a while on account of the bad weather.

Vern Bullion and Harry Chamberlain intend to begin putting up ice from Torch Lake this week. The ice is of excellent quality and no slush ice this year. It is the best time now to put it up. Mr. Kaufman will not put up any ice this year, as he will put in an electric cooling room for meat, and won't need ice. He has sold his cows and will buy milk from the Bellaire dairy next year.

Benny Bennett, an old time resident of this place, died at his home at Flint Sunday morning, so reports come here. He used to live on the farm now owned by James Vandenberg, five miles north of town. His wife, formerly Jessie Currin, is a sister of Mrs. Curgy Arnold. He will be missed by many relatives and friends here. His sister was Mrs. Maggie Shapton, of Barnard.

ELLSWORTH NEWS

(Delayed last week)

August VanDerArk is starting to put up ice again this week.

Several men from here got a day or two of work, helping to open the roads.

Mr. and Mrs. Koo Klooster left for Battle Creek this morning, where Mr. Klooster is going for medical treatment. Miss G. Shooks accompanied them.

A number from here, about 20, who went to Petoskey for the winter sports, were caught in snow drifts at Charlevoix when they returned, and were detained there some 12 hours before the roads were open to traffic.

We have been truly snow bound the greater part of the week, in one of the worst storms in recent years, and only Saturday afternoon were the roads all open, that could be opened, and then at 8:30 p. m. Saturday evening word came that US-31 was again closed. Shortly afterward the Essex road was closed again.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

New Farm Account Year Starts March 1

This will announce that the new year starts on March 1 for all co-operators keeping the regular farm account book. Already dates have been scheduled for checking in the books for the last fiscal year. This work will be done shortly after the middle of March.

If there are any farmers in the county who would like to start keeping records they should contact the county agricultural agent in Boyne City immediately so that he can visit you and explain how to keep records. In addition, inventories will be entered in the book and everything set for the new year.

There is nothing than can be done on the farm that will pay out bigger dividends than to actually record all transactions and at the end of the year know accurately how the farm business is progressing. A very comprehensive summary is given each co-operator after the book has been checked in, which gives you information relative to all efficiency factors and other comparisons. The cost of the book is only 20 cents and this gives you assistance in starting the book, a visit from a representative of the Michigan State College during the summer, help in checking in the book and the facilities of the college in preparing the summary for you.

4-H Club Leaders Attend Big Conference

Over 40 club leaders and club members were present at the second annual Leaders' Conference held at Marion Center Grange last Wednesday night, February 12. Promptly at 6:30 a fine banquet was enjoyed, prepared and served by the members of the Marion Center Grange.

The recently organized 4-H Club orchestra put on a half hour program. This orchestra is made up of five club members from the Hopyard school. It was a pleasant surprise for those present to find that such an organization was available in this county.

A. G. Kettunen, state club leader, Orville F. Walker, district club agent, and Miss Boyle, of the Michigan State Club department, were present. Miss Boyle favored the group by leading several songs. After a few remarks by Mr. Kettunen and Mr. Walker, the group was divided into two sections, one section being interested in the boys' program, and the other in the girls' program. At least an hour was taken up in presenting details of the club program and instructions on fulfilling the various requirements of club members. It was announced by the county agent that there are 30 clubs in the county with a membership of 300 members.

To help formulate plans for the 4-H Club activities a 4-H Club Council was selected. The club leaders selected were Wesley Jolliffe, Charlevoix; Mrs. Sarah Blake, Charlevoix; Mrs. Margaret Hurd, Charlevoix; Lester Walcutt, East Jordan; and Melvin Somerville, of Boyne City. Within the next week or so this committee will meet with the district club agent and county agent to arrange details for the spring Achievement Day, which is to be held at East Jordan the latter part of April.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By Ann Page

Weather conditions are responsible for a real shortage and much higher prices of eggs. With the return of normal weather eggs will be plentiful and inexpensive. Supplies of fresh pork are short and prices are again high. Beef and lamb are the best meat values at the present time.

Strawberries are arriving in fair quantities and are reasonable in price. Apples, oranges, grapefruit and bananas are all of good quality, plentiful and inexpensive.

There are many vegetables in market excellent in quality and most reasonable in price. Among the best values are beets, carrots, new cabbage, spinach and iceberg lettuce. Other very moderately priced vegetables include green beans, broccoli, peas and eggplant.

Here are three menus for Sunday dinner at different budget levels.

Low Cost Dinner

Swiss Steak — Potatoes
Glazed Carrots
Bread and Butter
Cherry Whip with Soft Custard
Tea or Coffee — Milk

Medium Cost Dinner

Baked Ham — Apple Sauce
Sweet Potatoes or Yams

Washington's Birthday Dinner

WE DRIVERS

A Series of Brief Discussions on Driving, Dedicated to the Safety, Comfort and Pleasure of the Motoring Public. Prepared by General Motors

No. 6—POWER AND SPEED

Most of our motor cars will go so much faster than we ever care to drive them, that no doubt people often wonder why so much speed is built into them in the first place. Of course, automobiles aren't built with the idea of pleasing the manufacturer or the engineer or the salesman. They're built to suit the men and women who are going to own and drive them. And there are certain things that people do insist on in their cars. It happens that some of those things are of such a nature that when the engineers provide them, an ability to go fast just naturally results.

For instance, nearly everybody likes to get going as promptly as possible. Now that's just a matter of the power we have in our engine and how our car is geared.

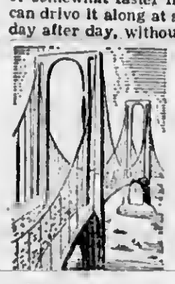
Then there's the business of hill-climbing. That may not mean as much in some localities as in others, but cars have to be built to suit us whether we live in Maine or Florida, Iowa or California—wherever we may live and wherever we may want to go.

Engineers tell us that they could build a fairly low-powered car that would pull us up the steepest hill. But if they did, they would have to gear it so low that when we got over the top and onto a level stretch, we could only go crawling along at a rate that wouldn't satisfy even the most conservative drivers.

But perhaps the most important reason for having our power what it is in modern cars, is a matter that many of us have never considered. We all know what happens to us, when we, ourselves, are going at high pressure all the time, either physically or mentally. A person can work 12, 14 or 16 hours a day, but we know we get along best when we don't tax our last reserves of energy all the time.

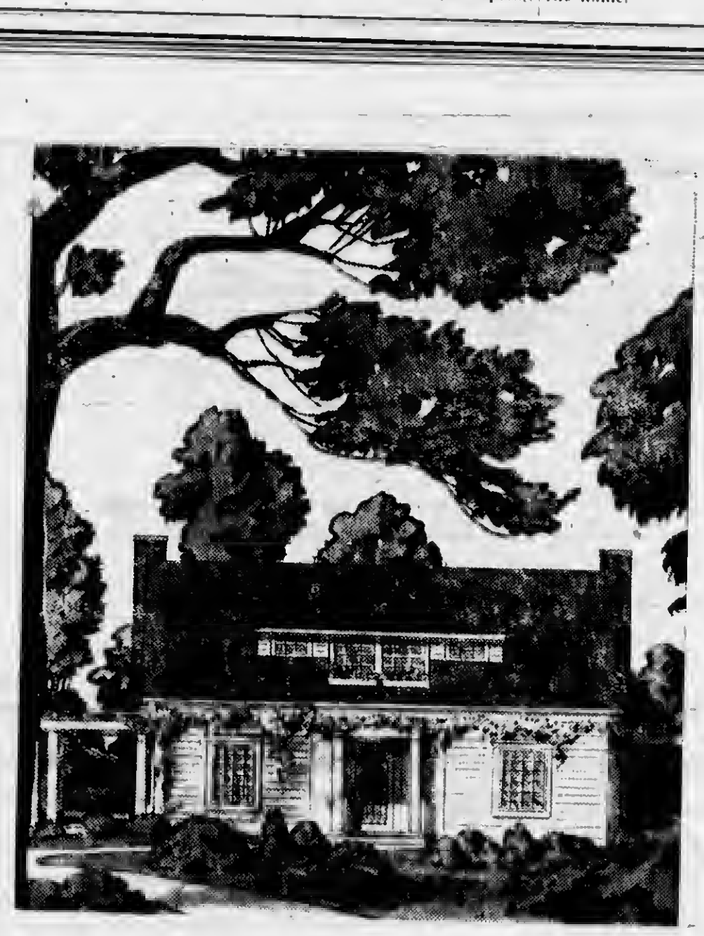
In the same way, anybody who has ever run machinery knows that if you keep it going at full capacity and full speed day-in-and-day-out, you're just multiplying the chances of a breakdown, sooner or later.

And that's how it is with a car. By building in the ability to run at high speed, engineers make it practical to run at reasonable speed. If our car can go seventy, eighty or maybe even more miles an hour, then it won't have to strain to go thirty-five, forty, or somewhat faster if circumstances demand. So we can drive it along at sensible speeds hour after hour, day after day, without over-working it.



When we stop to think about it, lots of things are built with that added safety margin. Elevators in our office buildings could carry far heavier loads than the weight of all the people they can hold. So could modern bridges. The steel girders of our buildings, the rails under our trains—in fact, any number of things we depend on day-by-day—are much stronger than they really have to be. They all have that extra margin of protection.

So with our cars, what we have to remember is that speed is simply a by-product of power. We can use that power unwisely, or we can use it sensibly and get better performance and greater safety as the result. Manufacturers can't decide that. It's all up to us



An Addition to the House

Very few purchasable things add as much to a home—solid value per dollar of cost—as modern telephone service.

It adds security. The presence of a telephone in the house means that here no time will be lost when some sudden crisis demands the services of a doctor. It means dependable, 24-hour contact with the police. It is a valuable form of insurance, for its swiftness in summoning the fire department can easily mean the difference between trifling damage and a crippling loss.

It adds comfort. The telephone frees every member of the family, and especially the housewife, from the drudgery of unnecessary steps. It saves them bothersome errands. It often enables them to escape hazardous exposure to disagreeable weather.

It adds enjoyment. The family accessible by telephone has greater opportunities for social pleasures. Over it they can both extend and receive invitations; they can send congratulations, or exchange greetings of the season. They can take part in "voice reunions" with distant friends or relatives—can indulge in the amenities of life to an extent denied those families without this modern, inexpensive convenience.

By delivering genuine value, telephone service of the type this Company supplies to Michigan has earned recognition as a welcome, sensible addition to the house.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY

CHAPTER XVIX

"Oh, Mother, thousands of reasons, Larry."

"I should think it would be a lovely trip for you," the older woman protested mildly.

"Aleh-h-h!" Ruth said. "Here's Larry!"

He came in, looking rather pale and tired on this hot day, and Joe wheeled up a chair for him, and for a few seconds the conversation was confused and general. Presently he said to Tony:

"Everything serene in the city room?"

"Oh, perfection," the girl answered. "Greeny is afraid to ask un for toy copy, even, and Fitch hasn't been out at all."

"You mean you two haven't seen each other since the other night?" Ruth asked. "Right in the same office!"

"We're on the same paper, not in the same office," Tony reminded her.

"I see your brother's engagement announced," Larry said.

"Oh, yes. And Phil's in seventh heaven."

"He's marrying one of the Ely girls, isn't he?" Ruth asked interestedly.

"Mary Rose—yes. The little curly one. There are five of them, I believe, but only three out."

"Well, that's very nice," Ruth approved.

"Oh, I have to go, and I hate to go!" Tony lamented. There was a general repetition of engagements for the week-end as she went to the door.

"Don't forget your book!" Ruth called.

"Here, I'll give it to her!" Larry followed her to the door. In a few seconds he was back in his chair again, and they could hear her speeding to Chevalier as he let her out.

Caroline Pulhemus sat on, idly chatting, plumping, sipping more iced tea. In her heart she said:

"Of course, Of course that's it! Good heavens, how completely glorious. One could see it the instant he came in—poor kid! She looked sick. Ruth doesn't know. She wouldn't. It would never occur to her that her impeccable Larry and her round-eyed, blue-eyed little friend in the white hat—Larry," said Caroline aloud, "where'd you pick up this clever little Tony of yours?"

"I didn't. She came over to Piedmont to cover a club story a couple of years ago, and had tea with Ruth and your grandmother. She got a great case on Ruth, and they've been friends ever since."

"Is she clever, Larry?"

He was murmuring to Mrs. Patterson. He brought his attention to the visitor with a little effort.

"Yes, she's a good newspaper woman. Works like a horse."

Mrs. Patterson pressed her granddaughter's foot. Caroline knew that meant that Joe was rather deeply interested in that quarter, and to consider what she said.

An hour later, when Joe and she were alone before dinner, she had an opportunity to ask him direct questions.

"It's serious with Miss 'Taft,' is it, Joe?"

"I like her awfully," Joe admitted, flushing.

"And do you think she likes you?" the sister pursued.

"No," Joe answered briefly. "I know she doesn't."

"Perhaps there's some one else," Mrs. Pulhemus said.

"No, I don't think so, Carrie. I think I'd know it if there was anyone else."

"I think you wouldn't," his sister assured him affectionately scornful. She watched Larry curiously, closely, all through the evening. Did he care, too? It was hard to tell, with Larry. She wondered if he had said anything to Antoinette Taft at the door. "I'll bet she and the impeccable Larry made a lunch date," Caroline thought.

Larry had indeed breathed a "Lunch at one tomorrow?" and Tony had assented with just one upward glance of blue eyes in the few seconds they had had together. Then he had turned back into the room, and the girl had gone on her way, her senses in confusion, her mind hardly conscious of what she did and said.

The days since the Wallister interview, and the scene in the office, and the incredible moment when Larry had come into this sunny room to find her alone, had passed without a glimpse of him. Tony had been feverish, despairing, heroic, broken by turns. She had planned letters that should go to him, written them, torn them up. She had dreamed, had shaken herself impatiently from dreams, had sat at her desk in the city room staring, staring, staring into space, not knowing what she felt or what she saw. There was but one object of all her thoughts—Larry, Larry, Larry.

On the day of the luncheon she went down to the city office looking her best and with her blue eyes at their starriest. She and Larry had made no engagement to meet; supposedly it would be there Tony settled down to her daily couple wondering just how and when she would hear from Larry; she worked away busily. It was twenty minutes to one; it was one o'clock, and still no sign and no word. She called his office on the telephone.

"Larry, this is Tony."

A pause. Then he said quickly, briefly:

"Sending right down."

For some reason she felt ashamed of herself, chilled. But there was little time to think. He did come down, entered the almost empty city room, stood looking gravely down at her.

"Come along."

They went out together, and Tony walked with him to the garage in Montgomery street and they got in the car together. Almost without speech they drove through the park and to a restaurant by the shore.

"This is a lovely place," Tony said, almost timidly. For something in his manner was new, was a little formidable.

"This used to be a great old roadhouse. But lately it's gone rather respectable and goes in for women's lunches."

They were placed at a little window table and could look out across the wide ocean boulevard.

"Well, this is nice," Larry said, when he had given the order.

"Had you forgotten our lunch date that we made yesterday?" Tony asked.

"No." Larry put his hand in his pocket, took out a scrap of paper, tossed it to her. Tony looked up at him surprisedly when she had read it, read it again aloud.

"'Dear Tony,'" she read, "'I can't lunch today; something has come up that I can't get out of, I'm sorry. Larry.' Were you going to send me that?" she asked.

"I'd rung for the boy."

"Oh, Larry, and then I telephoned? I'm so sorry."

"Oh, that's all right. It wasn't important."

They were having an oyster cocktail, she and Lawrence Bellamy. She had made him take her to lunch. Suddenly somehow it was all very flat and stupid in the bright noon sunshine. Why should she be having lunch with Larry, or, for that matter, why shouldn't she? Larry and his wife were her friends. It seemed not at all dangerous or exciting, but rather dull and unnecessary for them to come far out here to the beach on an ordinary business day and look solemnly at each other—

"Well, what did you think of the famous Caroline?"

"Oh, she's beautiful." Had they come here to talk of Caroline?

"Isn't she? But of course it isn't that. Charm personality—something. Nobody knows quite what it is that Caroline's got, but she's got it."

"Her husband died?"

"Walt Pulhemus, yes. Both husbands died."

"Both? She hasn't been married twice?"

"Oh, yes she has, and she's been engaged all over the place. She's going away now to decide between a perfectly splendid fellow, another Walter, Walter Fritsch—he's the tennis champ, or was—and Phil Pulhemus, her husband's brother."

"Heavens!" Tony said, with a quite inexplicable pang of instinctive jealousy in her heart. "I'll bet she told you that," she thought.

"As Caroline Vanderwall she was a heart-breaker," Larry said, with an air of making conversation. "I never knew her then. She went to a football game and bagged Bob Rand; he was the ace that year. Two years later he and Caroline went over a bank in the roadster; Caroline wasn't scratched, but poor Bob was killed. Caroline wore mourning that you could see three blocks away, and two years later she married Walt Pulhemus—military wedding, swords flashing, all that sort of thing. Walt died last year, and his brother Philip's mad about her now."

"Never a dull moment for Caroline," Tony observed drily. "Why is she going to China?"

"Phil Pulhemus is there, but I don't know that it's that. Her great friends the Faulkners are in Peking—he's military attache and it's a chance to see China under the most pleasant auspices—Tony, my dear," Larry said, breaking off the brisk, interested thread of his conversation, changing his tone, saying the last three words ruefully, hopelessly, appealingly.

"I'm so horribly sorry," he said, "I didn't mean to say this—nor to come to lunch today, nor to ask you yesterday. But the minute I went into the room and saw you—"

"I know," she said, in the pause. "It isn't what I want to do or ought to do, Larry," she said, in a low tone, looking down at the tablecloth without seeing it or seeing anything; "it's what I can do, now. I think and I plan—it's no use. It's no use."

The desolate notes of her voice died in the air. Larry was looking down, scowling; now he looked up.

"Tony, may I talk for a minute?"

"I guess you'll have to, Larry. I don't seem—" she smiled forlornly. "I don't seem to have anything to say!"

"Let me say this, then." Larry got so far and stopped short. He considered, frowning, with narrowed eyes staring into space, and a bitten lip. "It's only," he recommenced simply, "that there's nobody like you—no one. You're—you're Tony, and that means you're everything. I'm, and saying what I mean to say," Larry said, stopping again, "I love you so much, my dear," he added. "I love you very much."

Tony was silent, looking down. He saw two tears roll over her cheeks and splash on her locked brown fingers.

"That isn't it," Larry began again, with an effort, "No matter what—what we feel for each other, that isn't the question, is it?"

"No, that isn't it," Tony agreed trembling.

"Of course it's Ruth."

"Ruth," she said.

"Things being as they are, there's no happiness anywhere for us, Tony, no—no out."

"No out."

"I'm not going over the whole thing; what she did for me years ago, what she's always done for me, what—what our kid meant to her and to me," Larry said, thinking it out as he spoke, hesitating between words. "You know all that. You know her, how she clings to her own people, how—how—"

"It would kill her," he said, after a pause.

"It may kill me," Tony offered simply.

"Then what shall we do, Tony?" the man asked.

For a while Tony did not speak.

"Do you know that I never—never have loved anyone before?" she asked then, looking away.

"Is it true, Tony? Is it really true, my dear?"

"Doesn't that give me—any rights?"

"It gives you every right, Tony. I'm the one that's bound, my dear."

"All three of us unhappy, instead of just one," the girl said.

"She's not unhappy."

"She would be, if she knew."

"She mustn't know."

"Larry, you remember last week, when we were talking, when Aunt Meg came in?"

"I had meant to say then what I'm trying to say now. But we had so little time."

"I've been in a fever since then," Tony said. "I've not been eating—

"All Three of Us Unhappy, Instead of Just One."

nothing matters, Larry, except if men wear coats like yours, or walk the way you do, or if the telephone rings."

"I know," he said.

"That's being in love, isn't it?" the girl asked.

"My dear—" he began, and stopped short.

"And we're never to have more than we had that night? Just that one time, when you kissed me?"

She said the words slowly, thoughtfully, not looking at him, staring out across the shining Pacific. Larry said nothing; there was a long silence.

"Oh, isn't it too bad!" Tony exclaimed presently, in a shaking voice.

"I've thought that. What a horrible pity it is! What a waste! I've thought of going away. But—being just well started on the paper, and having no reason to give her—no excuse—"

"Larry," Tony said, after long thought, "how long does this feeling last?"

"You mean our caring for each other?"

"For it doesn't feel as if it would cure up—very fast—" Tony faltered, with trembling lips.

Keep Ahead of the Joneses

There's just one way to be "better off" than the other people on your street. . . . In order to keep ahead, you must think and act first. And that can be done by any one who decides to do it, whatever the family income.

For instance, some people are smart enough to buy things when prices are down. Right now, of course, you can find sheets and towels and other supplies for the house at lowest-this-year prices. And that isn't all . . . Some time this winter you will find underwear for the children, gloves for yourself, pajamas for the head of the house—and many, many more things offered at 'way-down prices.

All sorts of special buys will keep bobbing up, if you watch the advertisements in this newspaper — and keep thinking ahead, and buying ahead.

Where will you get all the money, you ask? Well, it doesn't take more money to be better off, this way. Actually it takes less. The pennies you save by timely buying add up to dollars in the end.

THEY'VE REFORMED

Do you recall the boom days when trucks blossomed on the highways much to your annoyance? They were in your way when you wanted to test out the speed of your new car. You said they were blocking traffic and you freely labeled their drivers as "road hogs." Now it seems truck drivers have been accumulating good manners with the years. The director of the bureau of traffic research at Harvard University has stated it as his opinion that "the truck drivers of America are the real gentlemen of the road." Not only that Harvard professor, but the rest of us realize this. In fact, the average American car driver can with profit take lessons in safe driving from the men who pilot trucks. It would be well for the most of us who drive cars if we learned some of the sane driving ideas and good traffic manners of the men who sit behind the wheels of our trucks. Let us hope that these will be the leaders in establishing more sense and courtesy on our highways. We need more gentlemen of the road if we are to decrease traffic accidents.

EYE ABUSE

The need for adequate illumination in the home, in school, and in the office and factory becomes apparent when one studies these facts concerning the human eye.

The pupil of the eye becomes smaller with advancing years and thus demands more light. The eye readily adjusts itself to varying conditions and is therefore likely to be abused. About 25 per cent of all young persons and about 75 per cent of all persons over 50 have defective vision.

Sewing is much harder on the eyes than reading and requires more light. Reading a newspaper requires about three times as much light as reading a book in larger type. Reading in bed is usually the hardest task demanded of the eyes, because of unusual posture and improper lighting. Good lighting generally aids defective eyes even more than it helps normal eyes.—Public Service Magazine.

Remember that "American" ends in "I-can."

SALES TAX REDUCTION

The demand is being heard in some quarters for a reduction in the sales tax. The fact that the state treasury now boasts of a surplus over operating expenses is advanced among other reasons for the proposed change in the tax law. While it may be true that state finances are in the best condition in years, still there is no guarantee that the gains made in recent months will be permanent. However, there is plenty of time remaining before another session of the Legislature to make a thorough study of state finances and arrive at a proper solution. In any event whatever change that is made in the law must be based on just how much service is going to be demanded of the state. Old age pensions, added relief burdens, replenishing the children's hospital fund, will add materially to the load. In the meantime economy in all units of government is the most practical way to lower the tax load. In this the state is setting a good example.

"ON THE CUFF"

Is it not time the nation took grave notice of the evils constant borrowing by the national government is going to visit upon future generations? To provide for an emergency which threatens national disintegration is always justifiable, but to continue borrowing money for an emergency until it reaches a point where it is deliberately inviting a large portion of the people to live off governmental bounty is dangerous. In the six years of depression the government has borrowed thirteen billion, nine hundred million, for relief. During that time not one thin dime has been repaid. We have been telling our creditors to "put on the cuff." The knowledge we have been so generous with borrowed money gives us something to think about. There are some who would dismiss this gigantic debt-making procedure with an "I should worry" gesture. What do you think the next generation will have to say about this improvident, if not criminal, unloading of our troubles onto their shoulders?

The Indiana evangelist who turned in a fire alarm to get a crowd is evidently the kind who tells the unregenerate there is one fire alarm they can't dodge unless they mend their ways.

TEN REASONS

One mother, wise in her day and generation, fearful lest the public believe that only the older people are opposed to liquor, obtained the following reasons against the use of liquor from ten young people, ranging in age from 16 to 25 and not from strictly temperate homes. "Here," she reports, "are their own reasons in their own words":

1. Drinking is harmful to one's reputation.
2. Money spent for liquor is a total loss.
3. Time spent in drinking is a total waste of time.
4. The best way to make a fool of yourself is by getting drunk.
5. Drinking interferes with one's having a good time.
6. Drinking interferes seriously with one's work.
7. A person under the effects of liquor is dangerous to the safety of others.
8. Drinking is harmful to one's health.
9. Drinking interferes with other people's activities and often spoils their plans.
10. Not one out of twenty are moderate. Why should I run the risk of losing my self-respect and will power?

DEER LICENSE SALES WILL HIT NEW RECORD

With Some Agencies Unreported, Total Sales for 1935 Reach 87,432

The number of sportsmen who bought deer-hunters' licenses in Michigan last fall came closer to the 100,000-mark than in any previous year.

THREE LOCAL FISHING TUGS AT SO. MANITOU

John Cross, Owner Tug Edna, Crew of Two, Ice-Bound Two Weeks

Manacled by the worst winter ice conditions on Lake Michigan in recent years, three local fishing craft have ended their annual trek to Lower Michigan ports at South Manitou Island.

According to latest reports, boats owned by Archie Cross, of Bill Boudine, have been laid up at the island, while the tug Edna, owned by John Cross, has been ice-bound there for over two weeks. With Cross are his brother, Don, and Louis Bourissau. It is reported Cross has 50 boxes of nets in the lake and 1,000 pounds of fish awaiting transportation to the mainland.

With a food shortage threatening, it is understood arrangements have been made for transporting provisions to the island by plane. It is also reported the Escanaba, Coast Guard cutter, is en route to the island from Frankfort to release the imprisoned fish tug Edna.

POTATO PROSPECTS ON UPWARD COURSE

Small Supply of Old Stock Would Indicate Better Prices

The supply of old crop potatoes available for market in the United States after January 1, this year, is relatively small according to the February bulletin of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

This indicates that the present level of potato prices probably will be maintained or advanced slightly during February and March. The trend of prices after March will depend largely upon the size of the early potato crop in the southern states.

We wish to thank each and every one who so kindly assisted us at the time of the burning of our home. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Molet.

EDITORIAL

OUR FARMER FOLKS

Ever attend a big gathering of people in a rural community, perhaps in a school house yard, or maybe on church property, or some picnic grounds? Dozens of folks, young and old; men with wind whipped faces, women with kindly looks, whose hands have known the feel of soap suds in gigantic washings and who have spent hours of their lives bending over glowing stoves in all sorts of weather, cooking, baking, working.

And have you ever noticed the warmth of feeling, the hearty greetings to strangers as well as to friends, the honest, frank efforts to make everyone feel at home? Neither hardships nor sorrows rob the rural folks of their genuine qualities of open friendship.

And, then, have you ever happened to put that type of gathering up against another one, where the clothes are much more expensive, where social etiquette is at a premium, where the standard of success is based on your ability to know the people, and to outdo Mrs. Jones, or perhaps Mr. Jones? Where little cliques predominate, where the clerk in a store is left outside the circle of persons who are fortunate enough to have a bankroll, and where idle chatter and gossip about thus and so are the chief program of activity?

Urban communities could improve their etiquette and social value a great deal if they could copy a leaf or two from the school house yard, the church lawn, or the country picnic grounds.—Algona (Iowa) Republican.

A FOOL AND—

The ancient proverb, "A fool and his money are soon parted," is a familiar quotation. Probably this was never better exemplified than in the famous Drake Estate case which has just been concluded in federal court in Chicago with the conviction of eight of the original list of 41 defendants. A myth and nothing more of frechooter gold, yet for years a gang of swindlers were able to collect nearly two million dollars from gullible people who were led to invest various sums of money in the belief that when the imaginary estate was divided they would get back their investment more than a hundred fold. Even with the fraud leader serving a prison sentence in Leavenworth his agents continued work and the money kept pouring in. The trial, which lasted for several weeks, thoroughly exploded every claim that such an estate exists, or has ever existed except in the minds of promoters. The fact that Sir Francis Drake has been dead for over two hundred years, and in spite of the evidence brought out at the trial, we venture the prediction that within a period of six months operators will be at work again.

NEED TO CONTINUE

The "Safety Campaign" which began with considerable fanfare several months ago seems to be dying from inanition. Unless sufficiently financed, campaigns of that nature are bound to collapse of their own weight—people soon lose their enthusiasm. Though the movement may lag the need for which it was inaugurated is as great as ever. Eight persons in the dead of winter met death through traffic accidents over a single week-end in Michigan. What to do to stop this needless slaughter of human beings is a problem remaining unsolved. Detroit jails are filled with traffic violators, yet violations continue unchecked. Traffic experts say that automobile accidents which took the lives of more than 36,000 people in 1935 were caused by less than 15 per cent of the drivers. To effectually curb this lawless minority seems to be the real job in hand.

FORD IS RIGHT

Henry Ford has delivered another of his practical talks to the nation. It is not hard to agree with his common sense ideas of honesty, thrift and ambition. The American market is the best market in the world, which can only be maintained by share-the-wealth in the form of high wages, he says. At the same time he condemns high prices as a "racket or trust," pointing out to an interviewer a manufactured article lying on his desk retailing at $12 which cost only 25 cents to produce. "Some day it will be found best to sell for as small a price as possible," he declared. And that is true. Some day those who seek to acquire wealth by manipulation, rather than through honest service, will awaken to find industry for profit at an end. It will be a sad day in American life if the many are penalized because of dishonesty and greed by the few.

DON'T FORGET

Unless feeding stations for birds are provided until the abnormal winter season has vanished they will perish from cold and hunger by the thousands. All natural food sources have been buried under a deep mantle of snow for weeks and our feathered friends must look to you to help them past this most dangerous time of the year. It only takes a few bread crumbs, a few kernels of grain, with but very little bother to supply their daily needs until the snows have melted. A song of the birds in Springtime will more than repay you for your trouble. Don't forget—feed them today.

Studies made of adult rainbow trout indicate that this species are essentially fish of large open waters where they can obtain abundant food. After ascending streams to spawn they return to Great Lakes waters. How long the young remain in the streams is not known.

No hope no effort.

STATE'S RIGHTS

It may be old-fashioned to talk about state's rights and home rule in these days of concentration upon Washington with its unlimited (?) financial resources, but many sincere students of the trend of affairs see a real danger in the attempt to centralize control in the national capital. For a hundred years the Democrats made the rights of the state their great party doctrine. But it has been abandoned by the New Deal.

This is unfortunate. America has grown great partly because of the freedom for local development and experimentation. Indeed, the idea that the government of this vast nation, stretching across a continent and composed of many diverse types of people, cannot be successfully controlled from Washington is not all theory. The big weapon to bring the states into line has been the treasury of the United States, employed in the outward benevolent system of federal aid. It remains to be seen whether the trend has been for the best. — Northfield (Minn.) News.

FRESHENING BREEZES

Courtesy on the highways pays big dividends.

Evidently the recount defendants forgot to add in those twelve votes by the jury.

Among life's secret ambitions is to see Sally Rand dressed in an Ethiopian uniform.

A pioneer is a fellow who can remember back when the cracker barrel philosophers always voted their ticket straight.

Then there was the old-fashioned gent whose greatest ambition in life was to be a member of the lodge drill team.

The Detroit News warns science to get busy because the racket boys are selling lawn seed guaranteed not to grow over two inches.

A survey shows professors lead busy lives. Too busy judging from what has been coming out of Washington the past three years.

Ethnologists have just informed us that Minnehahn was slain by a gangster. Seems the prohibition movement is older than we thought it was.

The farmers possess in cooperative action a great opportunity—an opportunity which has already achieved much, and that offers much more.

The government is sending out an army of investigators to learn how the people spend their money. We trust nobody will be so ill-mannered as to mention those fifty-dollars-a-plate Democratic dinners.

And Now In Closing—

Too many persons dip into politics for what they hope to gain directly from it. This is the time to lend interest for what may be done in developing sound as well as constructive policies in which all may be safeguarded and all equally share.

DAHLIA HISTORY TRACED TO 1615

Bulletin Weaves Romance With Information on Varieties, Culture

Whenever you see a dahlia flowering, whether it be in the fertile soil of Southern Michigan, the rocky ledges of mountainous lands, or in the lava beds of old Mexico, it is well to remember the many dangers and obstacles encountered by the dahlia in its trip about the world these last three hundred years.

For the dahlia "discovered" America before Columbus. It was itself discovered by a personal physician of King Philip II of Spain in 1615. Some time later roots were taken to Spain and to France, and from there spread to all parts of the world. Nor has its journey been an easy one, for it has been afflicted at different times by 15 major insect enemies and at least 10 plant diseases, all of which can have serious results.

Floriculturists have developed over 1000 known varieties of the dahlia in the last few hundred years, with the greatest development taking place in the last 50 years. Ordinary dahlias, cactus dahlias, and scented dahlias are some of the classifications.

Encyclopedic information about the dahlia has been collected in recent years by floriculturists. A brief summary is included with pointers on propagation and culture in an interesting bulletin now being printed by the Agricultural Experiment Station, Michigan State College, East Lansing. The bulletin, which can be secured by writing for special bulletin No. 266 on Dahlias, has been written by C. E. Wildon, assistant professor and research assistant in horticulture at Michigan State College.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

State Has File of Missing Men

Few persons can change their places of residence without, as a matter of routine, notifying certain commercial firms with which dealings or accounts are maintained. Relatively few licensed drivers of motor vehicles in the state have ever realized that the same law which requires that they be licensed also stipulates that they must notify the Department of State "immediately" of any change in residence address. Notification is made through local police and sheriffs' headquarters; these officials have proper notification forms.

The 1931 licensing statute provides that failure to have any change of address recorded in the prescribed manner may be cause for revocation or suspension of an operator's or chauffeur's license.

The Department of State has been unable, on many occasions, to furnish the correct home address of licensed operators in this state when the appeal for aid in locating people sought was for the purpose of notifying friends or relatives of injuries or even death. "Missing" persons have been sought in the records of the Department of State by relatives who knew that the person sought was a licensed automobile driver in Michigan. In unsuccessful cases, failure to locate the missing person was attributable only to negligence on the part of the operator to file his change of address — whenever made — with the Department of State.

There are many instances in which badly injured persons can be identified only by the names on their drivers' licenses, but when the addresses are wrong delays in more complete identification are experienced and in some cases, of course, it is impossible ever to trace the residence.

State Department officials advise that all licensed chauffeurs and operators check their home addresses on their licenses. It requires only a few moments to properly record the correct address and any subsequent changes which may be made.

AT THE MOVIES

Shirley Temple Stars As Little Dixie Belle

When a little girl and her happiness are involved, the Blue and Gray are all friends — and no foes — as Shirley Temple's "The Littlest Rebel," proves.

The picture, adapted from that immortal play of the Civil War, shows Saturday and Sunday, February 22-23, at the Palace Theatre, under the Fox banner.

As the tiniest Confederate in Virginia, the dimpled darling of the screen plays her first big dramatic role in "The Littlest Rebel."

O'Brien Star of Railroad Thrill Movie

George O'Brien is starred in "Whispering Smith Speaks," the red-blooded railroading story to be shown Wednesday and Thursday, February 26-27, at the Palace Theatre, but it is not the first time the popular adventure star has appeared in a picture dealing with the singing rails.

New Location Used to Film CCC Drama

So much of California has been photographed as background for motion pictures that Paramount, in selecting a new location for the screen tale of CCC camp life, "It's a Great Life," will offer movie audiences a brand new assortment of scenery. The picture opens on Thursday, February 26, at the Palace Theatre.

"If you mean how long I am going to feel that you were made for me and I for you," Larry said, looking down at his knotted fingers, speaking very low, "I think it is going to last all my life Tony. I don't dare let my mind wander to the thought of what I would do if I were free. I can't let myself think what it would mean to have you as my wife—mine, keeping my house for me, waiting for me at the end of the day. We have to forget all that. We have to go on from here.

"No, my dear, there's only one way. I'm not going to see you again. We'll pass each other in the elevators sometimes; I'll be downstairs in the city room only when I can't help it. Except for that, I'm going to try to forget you. I'm going to tell you now—once and for all—I've been so hungry to say just this to you—"

The luncheon was over and they walked slowly out of the restaurant together and stood in the sunshine outside, near the parked car.

"No, I'll not even say that to you, Tony," Larry said, steadily, standing close to her, looking down at her. "The wonderfulness of you—the—the everything that's you—isn't for me, I hope," he stumbled on, confusedly—and she knew that he was saying what he had determined not to say, losing his bearings completely as she looked at him, "I hope they're all for some—some luckier man—"

"Please—" the girl said breathlessly.

"You are so beautiful," Larry whispered, "I love you—I love you so much, my girl—my little Tony—"

He turned abruptly and walked about the car and got into the driver's seat. Tony got in on her own side; they drove for some minutes without speaking.

"You're going down to Monterey tomorrow?"

"Yes. Cliff's driving me. His girl is at Pebble Beach for Easter week. I'll be with Brady."

"We're taking Caroline down to show her the sights. But I'm coming up, Sunday night."

"You'll not be at Joe's housewarming, then?"

"No. I think it's better this way."

"It all seems so blank," Tony said, after a silence.

"Blank," the man said briefly.

"It's a nightmare—"

There was a long pause. When Larry spoke again they were at the door of the big office building.

"I'll drop you here. I have to go up to the club for a minute."

"It's good-by, then," Tony said. She got down and said a muffled "Good-by, Larry," and turned away. "Oh, my God, help me, help me, help me!" she said, one hand hard pressed against the pain at her heart. "What shall I do?"

CHAPTER XX

Brady had a square, sound little boy with a shock of black hair on his hard little head; even Tony admitted that he was one of the fascinating tiny babies of the world, and Brenda regarded him as she regarded Alvin, or rather perhaps as she had once regarded Alvin, with reverential awe.

Tony, watching her sister perform the solemn ritual that was Anthony's going to bed, fell into a dream. Brady was happy, and that was all that mattered. The plain little cheap rooms, the lean cupboard and empty icebox, the patient washing of baby linen, making of beds, compounding of small economical puddings, with each egg, each ounce of butter jealously considered spelled full and glorious living to Brenda.

"Tony, you're not keeping anything from me?"

"Darling, what should I keep from you?"

"I mean—are you still making yourself unhappy, are you still—I mean, how much do you see Larry Bellamy?"

"Let's see. Two weeks ago, once, when I got into that Oakland mess, and he came out to the house—and Thursday at Ruth's when her niece came; I told you about that. And—let's see—Friday at noon in the office for a few minutes—"

"Don't you see him every day in the office?"

"I do not."

"But, Tony, you know what I'm trying to find out. Do you still feel as you did last winter?"

"Yep."

"But, Tony, Ruth. She's been so kind to you."

"I know. That's where the catch comes in."

"Will you see him at Dr. Vanderwall's house on Monday?"

"Larry? No. He's not coming down."

"Why not?"

"There's something else he has to do. He's bringing Ruth and all of them down to Del Monte tonight, but he's going back tomorrow."

Tony looked up, ready for further explanation. But Brenda had forgotten Lawrence Bellamy's existence.

"Take your oil," she said in an undertone to the child on her arm. "Be a darling and take your oil. There you are! Look at him try to spit it out; he hates his fish oil."

"Can you blame him?" Tony asked sympathetically. "His little world smells of fish already."

Tony looked at the telephone. Larry's voice was at the other end of it; the Bellamy's party would be at Del Monte now. Every fiber of her being seemed drawn toward it.

Life went on in the contented, the almost smug groove that Brenda and Alvin had chiseled out for themselves. The baby went to sleep, and there were tomato salad and bran muffins and a cold custard for supper, with Alvin discoursing upon the superiority of the meatless meal.

"To say nothing of the economy!" Brenda, rather pale, and with her forehead wet, said cheerfully, bringing in the tea.

"But that isn't why we do it," Alvin said quickly, and Brenda echoed loyally: "Oh, no, that isn't the only reason we do it."

After supper Alvin observed that there was father a good movie up the street. Brenda said she was tired and not eager to go until she ascertained that he really could not go. Then she went with Tony.

"We'll be on the right-hand side of the house, about half-way down," she said to him in parting; explaining to her sister as they walked up the pleasantly straggling small-town street, "In case of a call."

Tony lay awake all night; all through the quiet Sunday she felt like an animal bound in a net; her mind, her soul, the very muscles of her body seemed jerking themselves away from this tame scene of Brenda's interests, Cliff's girl and her mother, and the dull lunch at the Bly cottage—salad and strawberries and hot rolls and cold sliced ham—

"Noblesse oblige," she said to herself sternly.

Brenda was on good at this party; she was sitting in a trance most of the time with Anthony in her lap, saying rapturously to anyone who would listen: "His first little social event, and I do think he's good!" and Alvin was throaty and opinionated. Cliff was so ridiculously absorbed in Mary Rose that he could not see anything else, and for the rest the group consisted of rather awkward little sisters fluttering about tremulously, and observing in gales of joyous laughter that they supposed that they'd all be falling in love now, and Mamma said she didn't want to hear any more of engagements for five years!

Tony threw herself into the business of being charming; she was the personality, she was Cliff's tremendously clever sister, who had so much fun reporting on the Call. She told them some of her adventures, and she saw that Cliff was proud of her; fat Mrs. Bly listened in rapt delight and said that Tony was as good as any actress she had ever seen—as good as Georgia Cayvan or Ada Rehan any day. There weren't any actresses any more, Mrs. Bly said regretfully, there were just painted dolls, without any expression in their faces.

The festivity dragged on. Tony sat next to Dr. Bly at luncheon and pointed so attractive a picture of the young Tafts and their orphaned struggles that the doctor said feelingly that he wished that his own daughters hadn't been born with all the Landvale money behind them; it wasn't a good thing to have life so smooth.

"Safer for girls than for boys, though," Tony observed, listening attentively. The doctor fervently agreed; nothing ruined boys like too much money.

And all the while Larry was close; perhaps playing golf on the Pebble Beach links, his white shirt open at his brown throat, his dark head bare. The blue sea rippled in in a dazzle of spring sunshine, and the gulls flew about crying their shrill piping cries, and the Blys fluttered about like gulls too, pleased when the guests admired the wide porch and the view, an urgent with the little damp sandwiches and the fruit punch. Mary Rose in white; Geraldine and Heloise in blue; Pauline in yellow. The youngest of them, a gawky and beautiful sixteen, was fondly called "Binky," and the sisters interrupted each other in eagerly telling Tony how smart she was, and how the boys liked her already.

It was a hot day, a rarely hot day for the ocean shore. It had brought forth an eruption of picnics and excursions; cars twinkled in black lines along the cliffs; every little cottage was gay with guests. Tiresome glare—tiresome people—rich, sticky, silly food; Tony endured them all with a sort of clinging of mental and spiritual forces. At Del Monte and Pebble Beach everything would be cool, elegant, ordered; the men in white, the women on the awninged terraces and in the cool deep rooms in frocks that had come halfway around the world.

If tomorrow were like today Joe would have heavenly weather for his housewarming. Ruth, Mrs. Patterson, Caroline would be there—not Larry. He was going back to the city; he did not dare come, he did not dare risk meeting this girl in white who was so dutifully amusing the Blys, so respectfully raising blue eyes to the tiresome old Dr. Bly at the head of the long table.

"But I'm prejudiced where Cliff's concerned, Doctor. I've never known him to do anything that wasn't generous and wonderful and good. He deserves a wife like Mary Rose!"

"Well, she's a good child, she's a good child!" And the doctor took off glasses to wipe his smiling eyes.

Tony had another night with Brenda; another adoring morning with Anthony's bath and bottle and nap.

On Sunday morning Joe came for her in the car, and she and Ruth and Caroline and old Mrs. Patterson were carried off into the hot still satin-blue world of beaches and water, towering eucalyptus and crouching cypress trees.

"Now, listen, don't expect too much," Joe warned her. "It's only a shanty, really, but Pop sort of fixed it up—"

"I'll love it."

He turned in at a field gate, followed a wavering dirt road toward the shore, brought them triumphantly to a small bare white house—that stood ridiculously square and harsh upon the edge of the cliff. Joe enthusiastically displayed the four-square rooms that he had had cleaned, cut into more spacious proportions. This wasn't finished—this was going to be great, but it was hardly started, of course. Here was where the bath was going to be—wouldn't that be great? And here—this was all in a mess, the man who had been doing it had broken his leg—but look, bookcases here—wasn't that swell?

Outside they heard the same story. Seeds had been planted all along here and there; the roses all were in, but you had to keep the gunny-sacking over them.

"Carrying chops and buns and coffee down to the rocky shore, Joe said to Tony:

"Come down here and run it, and I'll tear the whole place down, or buy you the Alexander place over at Pebble Beach."

"I like it just as it is!" Tony, laughing as she stretched a hand to this, stepping carefully over the boulders he took like a stairway, stopped and corrected herself. "I could like it," she said. "I'd like the floor of the big room and put a big terrace all inward the north."

"Well, blast it, those are just the things—I want you to tell me!" Joe protested. They were down on the damp sand now, among the big rocks; there was shade here from the headland that ran out to sea, on the south; the waves were creaming in in lazy interlocking circles.

"Joe, Joe, Joe darling," Mrs. Tod Hemus murmured, established in her scarlet stripes and scarlet hat against a great boulder, her strange black eyes staring far out to sea, "it's too beautiful. Your house—yes, it could be improved in minor details. But this—this is matchless!"

"Well, this is what I bought, after all," Joe reminded her, well pleased.

PUBLIC ENEMIES

Not so innocent as one might think is this candidate for "public enemy" of the highway dishonors.

By inconsiderately edging his car across the safety lines of cross-walks at street corners, the Cross-Walk Creeper forces pedestrians into danger zones. Many serious accidents result.

Good drivers are considerate of others—they obey the law by stopping back of the cross-walk.

Prenatal Care for Mother Will Lower Maternal Mortality

Prenatal care is the medical supervision for pregnant women throughout pregnancy. It must be sufficiently intelligent, conscientious and frequent to detect and control conditions which might otherwise result in harm or death to the prospective mother, child or both. All pregnant women, whether in their first or subsequent pregnancy, should receive this care and all those who receive this care as it should be given will be benefited.

In the first place the expectant mother is relieved of all anxiety, also adequate prenatal care helps to keep well women well. But most important of all adequate prenatal care will sift out those women in whom complications are developing or who are stumbling blindly into a stormy or impossible labor. This is the group that the doctor must reach. These are the women for whom the doctor can do so much if they will but let him. Complications can develop or exist in the woman who is seemingly well and that is why all expectant mothers should have adequate attention.

Competent physicians who take their responsibility seriously and keep abreast of obstetrics are qualified to supervise the pregnancy. A woman's selection of an obstetrician is second in importance only to the selection of her husband.

A physical examination is essential which should include measurements of the pelvis, the condition of the heart, blood pressure, kidneys, urine and the thyroid gland. Visits should be made to the doctor's office every four weeks for the first seven months and every two weeks thereafter. Comfortable clothing should be worn, avoiding abdominal constrictions, round garters and high heels. One should exercise daily, walking in the fresh air being the best form of exercise. Avoid long journeys by auto, train or steamer. While moderate rest is important, adequate rest is equally important. Obtain a full night's sleep and if possible an additional hour of rest every afternoon. These are some of the things that will be taken care of by the physician as well as any other specific condition that will arise.

By adequate medical supervision and strict adherence to the doctor's orders the expectant mother is insuring herself as well as the baby a healthier and happier future. We believe mothers are realizing more and more the importance of medical advice durig the prenatal period if 1935 maternal death rate figures are an indication. Three maternal deaths occurred in District Health Unit No. 3, which costitutes Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego counties. The causes of these maternal deaths were:

Other Accidents of Childbirth 1
Puerperal Septicemia 1
Other Toxemias of Pregnancy 1

This is in comparison with seven in 1934 and seven in 1933. This is the lowest number of maternal deaths that have occurred in this district since 1931, when there were four maternal deaths.

It is encouraging to the District Health Department to note this decline in maternal mortality for we make an endeavor to contact all expectant mothers and stress the importance of medical advice early in the prenatal period.

Pasteurization An Added Safeguard

"There appears to be but one way for human beings to protect themselves against the protracted debilitating effect of undulant fever; that is by destroying any disease-producing microbes that might be in the milk," Dr. Walter M. Simpson says in "Undulant Fever — Then and Now," an article in Hygeia.

"All statements that the food value of milk is appreciably lessened by pasteurization have no basis in fact. The only vitamin that is affected by pasteurization is vitamin C, which is never present in adequate amounts to prevent scurvy, even in raw milk. The feeding of orange juice or tomato juice to remedy this deficiency is equally essential whether raw, pasteurized or boiled cow's milk is fed to the infant. The modern pedintrician knows that cow's milk for infant feeding should be boiled; first, because boiling destroys disease producing microbes, and second, because it breaks up the tough curd and renders the milk more digestible."

Veterinaries working for the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture have been blood testing herds throughout Michigan—herds belonging to dairymen who have been sufficiently interested in the work to sign agreements to get rid of any reactors from their herds. Until such time as provision is made by law that all herds shall be blood tested to determine which ones have contagious abortion, there is a possibility that undulant fever may be communicated to man. Meanwhile boiling or pasteurizatinn are safety first practices.

FATHER AND SON BANQUET A COMING EVENT

Annual Affair to Be Held March 27th at Methodist Church

Those in charge of the annual Father and Son banquet ure glad to announce that the committees have been very successful in arranging for this annual affair, which has become such a permanent institution in our community, and hus always been so generously patronized by the men and boys of the entire city.

This year the program will be entirely a "home folks" affair. R. F. Sloan, who consented to uct as toastmaster, will bring ability and experience to the position, and his work with the boys this last year makes it especially fitting. There will be a short address, "To Our Fathers," by one of the sons, and the same by one of the fathers. W. F. Meyers has been invited to give the latter, und the high school is cooperating with the committee in selecting the boy for the former.

Floyd A. Supp, for many years a Detroit attorney, and now a resident of our city, will give the lnst address, on the topic, "Our Future Presidents." This gentleman made such a hit with the young people, in an address on a recent Sunday evening in one of our churches, that the committee is glad to present him to this larger group.

The committee hopes to sell all tickets beforehand, with none sold at the church, if possible, and not to overcrowd the dining room, to the discomfort of the diners. Remember the date, Thursday, February 27, 6:30 o'clock, at the Methodist church. Bring your boy, or borrow one!

The Island is the largest in a group ubout 15 miles off the Straits of Mackinac. Six hundred of the permanent population live in the village of St. James.

1935 HUNTING TOLL IS UNDER PREVIOUS YEAR

Conservation Department Reports Show That Woods Were Safer

Tho big-gamo und small-game hunting seasons were a little safer in Michigan this yeur as fur as the hunters are concerned.

As compared with the 1934-1935 records fewer hunters lost their lives as the direct result of eurelessnesa with firearms during the deer-hunting season of last fnll and the small-game hunting season of the current winter.

During the deer-hunting season seven hunters lost their lives, but only three of these fatalities were due directly to accidental or careless discharge of firearms in the woods. Three died of heart attacks while hunting and one was drowned. The injury toll during deer season was six.

Last yenr's records show that four hunters were killed by firearms during deer seuson nnd that only two were injured.

During the small-game hunting season this year, 15 hunters lost their lives from the accidentul and careless discharge of firearms. One died of apoplexy while hunting. The toll of injured was 36.

During the small-game hunting season of 1934-1935 a total of 31 hunters lost their lives in Michigan and 30 received injuries.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTS ATTRACT THE SMELT

Used by Boyne City Anglers With Successful Results

At our neighboring town of Boyne City a stunt's being pulled that disproves the theory that smelt are afraid of the light—and is being passed on to the reader for whatever it is worth.

Owing to meager catches, someone in Shantytown conceived the idea of using a light. In daytime very few were caught. At night a multiple cell flashlight or an auto storage battery and light are being used. Normally the smelt are taken from the bottom of the lake—about 40 or 45 feet down. With the use of the lights at night the smelt rise to some 10 or 12 feet of the ice and can plainly be seen swimming around.

Recently two fishermen were rewarded with taking over 200 each with hook and line aided with an artificial light.

It doesn't sound reasonable but 'tis bringing home the smelt.

DEER RATIO IS GOOD AT THE CASINO REFUGE

Bucks and Doe Ratio 7 to 10 In Total of 61 Deer Trapped

A magnificent 18-point buck estimated to weigh 300 pounds wns recently cuught in a deer trap operated by CCC Camp Cusino in the Cusino Game Refuge, according to the monthly report of Chief Foreman Mathew Hansen.

Until and including January 28, 61 deer hud been trapped, of which 29 were re-catches. The ratio of bucks to does in that period was seven to 10; of the fawns trapped, males and females were evenly divided.

All of the deer were found to be in good physical condition.

Five traps and tagging crates are being operated, and are visited twice daily every day by enrollees in charge of the project or by Mr. Hansen personally. The project, which is under the supervision of the game division of the Department of Conservation, has as its purposes the study of movements of the deer in the area, determination of sex ratio and determination of physical condition at different periods of the winter.

A corollary record of general weather conditions is being kept to facilitate the general study.

FROST PENETRATES TO FREEZE WATER PIPES

City Crews Answered Unusual Number Calls During Past Week

While the depth of snow this winter has generally been thought sufficient to prevent frost penetrating the ground deep enough to freeze water pipes, the city water department has had an unusual number of calls during the past week.

According to Vincent Madison, superintendent of utilities, city crews have answered on an average of eight to 10 calls daily for the past week to thaw out water pipes. They were kept busy all day Sunday, and made 10 calls Monday.

The trouble has been concentrated to areas where water mains were at a shallow depth beneath streets which have been kept clear of snow throughout the winter.

Due to the fact the city owns its own electric plants, Charlevoix citizens ure fortunate in the respect that the city thaws without charge all pipes up to the meter boxes. In many cities a charge as high as $7.50 is made for any thawing.

FRUIT UNHARMED BY COLD TO DATE

Continued sub-zero nights have not injured cherry buds, according to a number of growers who have checked on their orchards within the past few days.

The sap has not started to journey upward into the tree unil the buds are still dormant and uninjured, most growers believe. They say the gravest danger will come in April when the trees are filled with sap and the buds are swelling and moist.

CITY BUYS ROAD PATCHING OUTFIT

PREPARES FOR SUMMER WORK ON MACADAM STREETS

Adopt Resolution Renewing Contracts With State Highway Dep't for Maintenance Work

Preparing for proper maintenance in the spring of several miles of macadam surface streets within the city limits, the council Monday night authorized the purchase of u modern patching outfit.

In years past the city has been dependent upon the county road commission equipment for this work, making the improvements when the county euipment was available. This method was not without inconvenience, inasmuch as numerous times patching was done during the height of the summer season.

The new patching outfit is the most modern obtainable, u transportuble unit mounted on wheels with gasoline heater.

Another item of business along highway lines was the adoption of a resolution uuthorizing the mayor and clerk to sign agreement with the Stato Highway Department for city maintenance of US-31 and M-66 within the city limits. The contract, renewal of an agreement in force several years, places the responsibility upon the city for maintenance and snow removal on these trunk lines for another year. The highway department compensates the city for its work.

The council approved a two weeks' payroll aggregating $2,474.11 and adjourned until Thursday evening, March 5, for canvass of the primary election vote.

EAST JORDAN WOMAN SWIMS DAILY IN LAKE

Temperature No Barrier to Mrs. P. LaLonde; Cure for Colds

While most folks shiver beside the radiator and wonder what to do about colds, Mrs. Peter LaLonde, of East Jordan, chops a hole in the ice on Lake Charlevoix each day and goes swimming in a bathing suit.

She has not missed her daily dip all winter, sometimes with the mercury down as far as 19 degrees below zero. Each morning she waiks from her home to the lake in her bathing suit, hacks a hole in the three-foot ice with a hand saw and hops in.

"I have not had a cold or a sign of one this winter," she says. "About 1924 or 1925 I had pneumonia and it left me with a sort of catarrhal condition. This daily swimming has completely cured me. During the last four winters I was always extremely nervous. That has all gone, too, and my circulation is fine."

MARCH PENSIONS ARE INCREASED

START PAYMENT OF NEW FEDERAL FUNDS

Increase of 33 Per Cent to Michigan's 19,210 Penalooers Is Announced by Dr. Callahan, Director

Pensions puid to 19,210 Michigan residents in March will be increased 33 per eent as the result of receipt of $330,000 in federal funds under the national social security act, Dr. Philip A. Callahan of the old age assistanco bureau has announced.

The federal check, which provides $165,000 for each March and April, will boost the pension checks from an average of $11 to $16.50 per month. State funds, from the $1,900,000 legislative appropriation, will be used to mntch the national grant, dollar for dollar.

March pension payments, to Michigan's dependent aged, will be mude in two checks, Dr. Callahan explained. One will be for the supplemental difference due pensioners for February, and a substantial saving in postage will be affected by the douhle mailing euch envelope.

Receipt of federui funds will not double the amount of pensions, Dr. Callahan explained. "There has been widespread misunderstanding," he said, "but we cnnnot boost the amount of pensions 100 per cent."

The state's old uge pensions cost $225,000 in February, while the monthly federal allotment is $165,000. The pension bill, paid from the legislative appropriation, was $212,000 in January, und Dr. Callnhan estimates the state's cost will be $225,000 in March.

Under the new arrangement, machinery is being set up to make the March pension payments for the state according to eight districts. The first mailing is acheduled for March 5 and the last for the 25th.

Of the 48,000 applications for old age ussistance originally received, 19,210 hove already been npproved for payment. About 14,000 more are now being checked and investigated, and Dr. Callahan anticipated that the total load will be about 22,000.

The state's payments range from $5 to $15, depending upon the requirements of individual cases. Muny aged persons are living with children or relatives who furnish board and room, and ao the state check is intended to cover clothing and incidental expenses.

Severe cold weather during the last two months has noticeahly thinned the ranks of Michigan's aged who receive financial aid, Dr. Callahan said about 80 pensioners died during January.

KIWANIS STATE CONVENTION MACKINAC ISLAND

Local Club Will Play Host Along With Other Northern Units

Charlevoix Kiwanians are expected to take part of the responsibility for attondance and entertainment at the state Kiwanis eonvention to be held on Mackinac Island, July 10-11.

Gladwin Lewis, of Traverse City, division lieutenant-governor, sends word that he expects local Kiwanians to do their full share in making the convention a success.

MICHIGAN'S FISH AND GAME KILLED

SEVERE WEATHER IS MAKING HEAVY INROADS

Conservation Director Hoffmaster Reports Worst Conditions in the History of Department

Michigan fish and game birds will be substantially depleted as a result of the most severe winter in many years, Conservation Director P. J. Hoffmaster has announced.

Many reports have been received that fish are dying in large numbers in shallow lakes of the state. Fishermen have discovered many dead fish when they chopped holes through the ice, according to Hoffmaster.

Low oxygen content in lakes without inlets and outlets has resulted from consistent sub-zero temperatures which have produced a solid layer of ice. Vgotation in many bodies of water has taken oxygen from the water and caused the death of fish.

Park Lake in Ingham county, Battese Lake in Juckson county, Lake LaGrange in Cass county, and Addison millpond in Lenawee county offer the most serious conditions reported to the Conservation department this winter.

The loss will not be heavy in larger lakes, because they are deeper and generally provide sufficient oxygen from springs or inlets, Hoffmaster explained.

Autopsies ure now being conducted on the bodies of many pheasants and quail turned in to the department to determine the cause of death. Preliminary reports indicate extreme exposure was generally the cause, although many crops reveal a shortage of sufficient grit.

Hardest Pull

Hoffmaster said the past few months "have been the hardest on game and fish of any winter since the Conservation Department was started in 1921."

A statewide campaign to provide feed for birds this winter, conducted through sportsmen's and conservation association and schools under the direction of department employes, is credited by Hoffmaster with saving the lives of many birds.

BETTER BE GETTING SNOW OFF THE ROOF!

Danger of Cave-Ins Immioent in View of Heavy Snowfall

While no roofs in the city have fallen beneath the weight of snow, many are doomed to crash unless the snow is removed, a local contractor stated this morning.

The accumulation of snow on roofs of the city is the greatest in years and the minute it has an opportunity to absorb moisture and grow heavier the roofs are in danger, this builder claimed.

Home owners are urged to give some attention to their roofs, particularly flat roofs over porches or sheds, which may not stand the weight of the deep snow.

PYTHIANS INITIATE LARGE CLASS

RANK OF KNIGHT CONFERRED UPON THIRTY-SIX

Grand Lodge Officers Present and Participated in Ceremonies Conducted Monday Night

Pine Lake Lodge, Knights of Pythias, had a gala night Monday evening. The rank of Knight was conferred upon 36 candidutes chosen from applicants for membership made during the past three weeks. It was u splendid group of men.

Grand Chancellor Claude E. Lewis, of Hillsdale, Grund Vice Chancellor Fred M. Breen, of Detroit, Grand Master of Exchequer Oscar Peterson, of Holland, Grand Inner Guard George O. Cram, of Pontinc, Grand Outer Guard George Digby, of Bay City, and Past Grand Chancellors Thomas P. McKimmie, Birge C. Swift, of Middleville, and Frunk Berman, of Detroit, were present and participnted in the ceremonies. Delegations from East Jordan, Central Lake and Traverse City lodges were present. The attendance was counted at 175.

A buffet lunch was served, during which the grand chancellor addressed the Pythiuns in a clear, forceful und well-delivered speech which was enthusiastically received.

Pine Lake Lodge has taken a progressive step in fraternalism during which u sort of re-organization has taken place. It has adopted a complete revision of its by-laws which provide for the nbolition of dues and substitute in its place a budget fee arrived at through a budget system for handling all of its business affairs. The major step in advance is the abolishment of the membership or initiation fee which has been a part of the frnmework of all fraternal orgunizntions for centuries. The members of Pine Lake Lodge have declared the exuction of a money payment as the price of admission to a Pythian lodge, and participation in its fellowship, to be unfruternal. They bluntly say that henceforth Worth shull stand above Wealth in testing the qualifications of an applicant for membership, and that commercialism shall be reduced to a minimum in all of its affairs.

In taking this step Pine Lake Lodge is pioneering in the fraternul field and its success will he watched with interest all over the country. There is much to commend their action.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE NEWS BULLETIN

Auto Owners Beware

With but a short time remnining in which motorists of Michigan may buy and install their 1936 automobile license plates or stickers, if they plan to continue driving, Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, points out: "If there aren't enough hours remaining in which the late-comers can be served, it will merely mean that some people are going to be deprived of the use of their cars until they can get plates—there can be no extension of the deadline after midnight next Saturday, by me or by anyone else."

Asked if he might canvass members of the Legislature to determine their attitude toward an "unofficial extension" of the deadline, Atwood said that no such course would even be considered by him.

The State Department head said that the record-breaking severity of the winter weather had made it inconvenient, if not impossible, for many residents of rural areas to reach branch offices to buy their plates during the past two or three weeks, but, that such conditions did not prevail in other sections of the state. "In any event," he said, "I have extended the time to the last date permitted by law. If some motorists have to put their cars up for a day or so while all late-comers are accommodated with plates, the responsibility rests with those who delayed their purchases when they might have bought them conveniently and without delay any time since early in the winter season."

Auto owners, unable to purchase full year license plates, may purchase a sticked good until July 31st at half the full year rate.

An Ohio man cracked his arm when he politely lifted his wife's chair back from the dinner table. Leaving the little lady seated when you jerk it back is also a good way to crack a romance.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes three good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

Let's get straight to the point about your winter gasoline

In plain words it's old-fashioned to have winter starting troubles. (You needn't admit anything in company—because lots of people don't know there is hard starting any more.) But get a neighbor off to one side. Chances are he's an old regular on Winter Blend Conoco Bronze, or he is one of the thousands and thousands who changed to it these recent cold months. See if he doesn't say almost these words: "You always start up on Conoco Bronze; you start, that's all. No weather yet, around here, seems to make any difference. Maybe your car isn't new, but this stuff starts. You or I don't know how any gasoline is made, no matter what we're told. But when you don't have to grind the starter and pray for your battery, nor keep on choking and choking, then you know you've got what you want. CHAPTER XX

The rotund dops were toasted; the coffee poured like smoking amber into the white tin cups; the chops were sizzling in the last stage of perfection when there was a hail from the cliff. The four women and Joe looked up. It was Larry.

Tony, her hands occupied with her chop and her cup, merely waved at him as he came down the rocky stairway; she could wait, now.

"I got homesick for all of you, driving in last night, so I telephoned Arnoldson, and we had our talk at breakfast this morning, and I started right off again! I thought I'd like to have a look at Joe's housewarming, and then maybe we could all have dinner at the lodge tonight. But I've got to turn in early and get an early start in the cool of the day tomorrow. Or maybe I'll go up tonight."

The conversation was happy, desultory. They were all relaxed into comfortable positions; the food was good.

"What's that man out there doing?"

"Abalone fishing. They send them up to San Francisco."

"Are they any good?" asked Caroline.

"Oaly," Tony answered, "when they have garlic and tomatoes and onions and eggs and cracker crumbs to disguise them. They're like clams. You have to have everything else to go with them."

"Clams and hot butter, just hot butter," Joe rhapsodized. "Clams need nothing more."

"Ugh!" Tony ejaculated, shuddering.

"I gather you don't like clams," Larry said. It was the first time he had spoken to her. The girl raised lazy lashes and glanced at him; looked away again to see. Caroline Polhemus' swift look went from one to the other; her forehead wrinkled faintly.

Presently Tony and Larry had their moment. It came when Ruth, Joe, Caroline, and Larry had started up the beach to a certain rock pool that Joe said was unique in the entire world. He had taken more than fifty specimens from it and believed there were more.

Tony washing cups in the tide edge, had told the others to go on, she would stay with Mrs. Patterson. But now the old lady was quite frankly asleep, and when Larry came back for Ruth's camera, it was quite natural for Tony to say that she would go on with him and join the others.

"How goes it, Tony?"

"Yes, I know. It goes badly," he agreed seriously.

They walked along, Larry waving the camera at Ruth, a hundred yards ahead, who had stopped to look back.

"Oh, dear!" Tony said, in youthful despair. After a minute she went on, in a different tone: "Then I'll tell you what I'm going to do, Larry. I'm going to New York. It's a long way away, and I would have to work terribly hard there. I could get on a newspaper there. I have to get away, Larry. There's no happiness here."

"I Am Afraid You Will," He Said in a Hard Voice.

The man said nothing. They were crossing a rise of rocks now, and he stretched a hand to her.

"And I hope," Tony said, finishing her sentence, "that I will forget it all."

"I am afraid you will," he said in a hard voice.

"Ah, Larry my dear, never be afraid of that! I'm not like that. I've never cared before, not for anyone. I'll never care again, this way. We have to—to separate, and to—to get over it—" Tony said, under her breath, "we'll not see each other, Larry, not hear each other's voices!"

And then, after a silence: "Larry, do you think I ought to go?"

The man hesitated a moment and then said briefly: "Yes, I do."

"It will kill me," Tony said.

"If you go, at least you shan't worry about money—salary," he said. "I've newspaper friends there; I'll take care of that. Grant and Kate, and Odd and Mabel—wonderful people—they'll keep an eye on you."

"Larry!" she burst out, "don't—don't ever forget me!"

"There'll never be anyone else.—We've no time now," Larry said hurriedly, "when are you going back to town?"

"Tonight. Brewer of the Chronicle, and his wife, and some cousin or sister or somebody, are going up, and I meet them at the hotel at five."

"Could you get out of it with the others and drive up with me?"

Tony considered, her color fluctuating. "When would we get into town?"

"About half-past one."

"Oh, Larry, I would love it so!"

"Get out of your engagement, then, and I'll pick you up at the hotel at half-past nine. You can get some dinner there?"

"Surely. But, Larry—"

"But what?" he asked, in the encouraging, the almost harsh manner he had used throughout.

"I shouldn't."

"How'd you mean you shouldn't?"

"I mean," Tony said hesitatingly, "that I won't tell Bendy. That sort of feeling."

"I see," he said, troubled.

"It's just driving up to town with you. And Ruth thought nothing of our driving up from Santa Barbara!" the girl argued.

"Yes, but it's different now," Larry reminded her honestly, in a tone that brought the color suddenly to her face. "But we won't see each other much, from now on. I go to Los Angeles on Wednesday night."

"And Cliff is to be married five weeks from yesterday, and after that—yes, then I'll go East," Tony said.

"Life is ahead of you, my dear. With your beauty, your wit—the something that makes everybody love you, that makes you Tony."

"Don't talk that way," the girl interrupted steadily.

"You're very beautiful in that white outfit, Tony."

"If you think I am!"

"I'll stop at the hotel, anyway, at nine-thirty tonight."

Her blue eyes met his for the fraction of a second; there was time for no more. They scaled a slippery rise of black wet rocks; Joe reached down a bracing hand to Tony; they were at the pool.

CHAPTER XXI

Mysterious movement, mysterious colors pulsed in it as they all looked down. Ribbons of seaweed in every shade of purple, metallic blue, scarlet, cream color, shell pink, waved to the green clear water. Starfish and baby crabs, flowerlike anemones, violet prickly sea urchins and huddled colonies of blue-black mussel shells were all there, set in a Botticelli background of tiny sea flowers, starry sea blossoms and polished bits of rock. The slow-surging tides brimmed over the pool; receded in a dragging foam of white; the roar of the breakers, the piping of gulls, the singing of the summer wind above the grassy cliffs came to them through the cooling afternoon air.

When they all walked slowly back across their own earlier footsteps in the wet sand the tide was going down, and a rich blanket of fog was pushing in against the hazy western sunset. Stiffly, wearily, they went to the cliff, and stood for a moment to look at the wide panorama of the glittering sea, and packed themselves into the car.

"Where to, Tony?"

"Brenda's, please, Joe."

"Tony," said Ruth, "we all drive up Tuesday. Could you stay?"

"Ruth, I'd love it. But I'm going back with the Brewers tonight; they pick me up at the hotel at five. I've got to turn in a column tonight."

"Come up and have dinner with us Wednesday night, Tony, and play bridge," Ruth said, at Brenda's doorway. "Joe's coming in. Larry'll be in Los Angeles."

"Wednesday? I think I could."

In a great rocker on the porch, inconspicuous behind a pillar, Tony watched the pleasant intermingling streams of hotel life come and go. Her suitcase was at her feet. The Brewers came, and she went down and talked to them; came back to her secluded chair. The die was cast now.

At six o'clock the wide drive, the porches and steps of the hotel were deserted; everyone was dressing for dinner.

Her heart rose into her throat. It was here now, Larry's car—now, before seven o'clock—

"Thank goodness you're here!" he said, big and businesslike in his big brown overcoat and driving cap. "Here, give me your bag—hop in. I wouldn't have known what to do if you'd happened to be inside, having dinner or something! By the luckiest chance in the world Fitch telephoned; they want me in there round eleven. Ruth took the message."

They were in the car. They had left Del Monte behind them and were smoothly moving north. If Tony had ever any doubts, any misgivings, they were gone now; the world was all heaven in the soft twilight, with Larry's big shoulder beside her.

"We have to face it, Tony, that we love each other, and that we can't have each other. I'm not going to tell you what you mean to me. I have no right. The only thing to do is to face it and work it out somehow."

"One of the things," he added, after a space, "that holds me to her. She's not strong; she did everything for me before I got a start; we had a boy and lost him. Any talk of our separating now would break her heart; she's not done anything mean or small to be treated like that. She loves me."

"And your little finger," he went on, as Tony was silent, "is more to me than anything else in the world. The way you pull on your hat, the way your mouth works, the whole of you—brown and long, lying as you were today in the sand—" He stopped.

For a long time neither spoke. Then, Tony said staunchly:

"Well, I'm going away. I don't know how I can. My heart'll be like a stretched piece of elastic between here and New York. I can't stay where I see you, or could see you, or could telephone you. If you were divorced," Tony said, "even then I'd not have an easy row to hoe. People like Ruth too much; they feel too much against the younger woman who draws a man away from an older wife. But at least I'd make you a home, I'd have children, we'd travel. The other way I'd hate myself, and you'd hate me."

"I'd never hate you. I'd want to go home to you, darling—not from you."

"There seems to be a blight on me," Tony said somberly. "I don't seem to do things as other girls do."

"I'll tell you what you seem to me," the man said. "You seem to me the most wonderful woman in the world, a woman who is going to be admired, loved, followed, wherever she goes. You're in my heart and my mind and my soul all day and all night, Tony, young and brown and beautiful, with the most amazing mouth in the world, and the most amazing voice, and the loveliest laugh. Your eyes were like two dark-blue flames down on the beach today, with the shadow of the big rock behind you."

"It's too bad," Tony said after a while, in a wistful echo of her own voice. "It's too bad, Larry, could we—I've just thought—could we tell Ruth?"

"Tell Ruth!"

"No, I suppose not."

"It would be a thunderbolt to her. It would shake the very foundations of her life. No woman ever felt so married as Ruth. And she loves you next, I believe, to her mother and me. That perfectly logical mind of hers would begin working on it, imagining things, fearing things. She'd lose you and me, too. Ruth's—you know her, and you love her," he added restlessly, "but Ruth's not—not easy about things like that. I don't know that any woman would be, but she's the last one to—to see our side. I'm here as much as her emeralds are, or her car, or her income, and she can't see it any other way."

"Funny thing, marriage, isn't it, Larry? I'd never want to hold any man like that. Oh, I'm so sorry, my dear, I'm not sorry that all this happened," Tony said, after a moment. "It's taken all the joy out of my life, but it's put something else in, better than joy. I'll never lose that, anyway, that I love a man, want him, want to belong to him—"

"Steady!" Larry said.

"I'm steady. I've been thinking it all over. I've just come to see how it is, that's all. I can't compromise, and you can't get free, and so I'm going away. It's been coming to me as we drove along here. I'm going immediately. I'm going to tell Cliff that the newspaper's sending me. I'll get out."

Larry cleared his throat.

"It's too bad it has to happen this way," he said mildly.

Tony jumbled herself up against his shoulder, spoke in a different tone.

"We have the rest of this drive, Larry," she said. "Let's forget that maybe it's all we'll have."

It was quite dark now. While they had been talking the car had been moving northward through the dark

TO THE HILLS

Fears are already being expressed that dwellers in the valleys will be forced to flee to the hills when the blanket of snow that now lies deep over the hinterlands of Michigan begins to disappear under the melting suns of late February or early March. Should rain accompany nature's snow removal program the flood waters will come nearest the deluge which sent Noah scuttling to the Ark of anything this state has ever experienced. Not only is the snow carpet seven inches above normal, but lakes and streams due to steady cold have unusually thick ice coverings. The state drainage commission warns that every precautionary measure to prevent damage be taken, and that emergency crews be recruited and kept in readiness to dynamite ice jams as quickly as they form in the creeks and rivers.

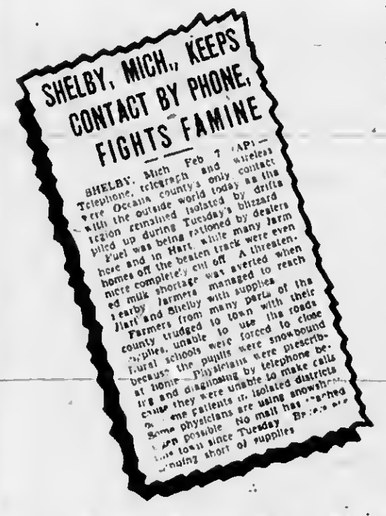
"...BUT I CAN TELEPHONE"



SHELBY, MICH., KEEPS CONTACT BY PHONE, FIGHTS FAMINE

SHELBY, Mich., Feb. 7 (AP)—Telephone, telegraph and wireless were Oceana county's only contact with the outside world today as this region remained isolated by drifts piled up during Tuesday's blizzard. Fuel was being rationed by dealers here and in Hart, while many farm homes off the beaten track were even more completely cut off. A threatened milk shortage was averted when Shelby farmers managed to reach Hart and Shelby with supplies. Farmers from many parts of the county, trudged to town with their supplies, unable to use the roads. Rural schools were forced to close because the pupils were snowbound at home. Physicians were prescribing and diagnosing by telephone because they were unable to make calls. Some patients in isolated districts are using snowshoes. Some physicians are using snowmobiles where possible. No mail has reached the town since Tuesday. Bread is running short of supplies.

This clipping from the St. Joseph Herald-Press shows there is no isolation where there is a telephone.

You hear it all over Michigan . . . as winter storms put a stop to many everyday activities or make them extremely difficult.

In numerous communities the physician cannot reach the bedside of his patient. But he can prescribe and diagnose by telephone.

A salesman is cut off from his customer by snow-clogged roads or uncertain rail transportation. But he can transact business over the telephone.

Delivery of the weekly letter to the folks back home may be delayed by winter's grip. But telephone wires carry the sound of loved voices instantaneously to anxious ears.

The telephone is so much a part of our day to day activity that we accept it as commonplace. But in time of widespread emergency, we see how far its value to all the people outweighs its cost.

VALUE OF MICHIGAN LIVESTOCK INCREASES

Jump of 48 Per Cent Reported by Michigan Co-Op. Bureau

The total value of all livestock on farms in Michigan January 1, 1936, has been estimated at $136,569,000, according to the Annual Livestock Report issued by the Michigan Co-operative Crop Reporting Service.

This is 48 per cent more than the figure of $92,495,000 for January 1, 1935, and is the highest January 1 inveatorial value for this state since 1930. For all species of livestock, the Jaauary 1 values per head were materially higher this year than last. In addition, there was an increase in the numbers of livestock on farms. The number of all cattle increased two per cent, sheep eight per cent, and hogs 16 per cent, while the numbers of horses and mules are estimated to have remained unchanged.

Converting the numbers of the different species to animal units, which allow for differences in feed requirements, the composite change from last year was an increase of 2.7 per cent.

Cagney Coming to Palace In "Frisco Kid"

"Frisco Kid," Warner Bros.' thrilling tale of the glamorous Barbary Coast of old San Francisco, opens at the Palace Thentre Saturday, February 29, with an all star cast headed by James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay, Ricardo Cortez and Lili Damita.

The picture is set in the colorful background of the early lifties when the waterfront nt the Golden Gate was a flaming panorama of gilded gambling halls and palaces of pleasure; when murder, arson, crimping and robbery was winked at by the authorities who derived huge revenues in bribes from the denizens of the underworld.

New Faces Come to the Screen In Clue Club Drama

Many aew faces appear in the First National production "The Murder of Dr. Harrigan," which comes to the Palace Thentre on Wednesday and Thursday, March 4-5.

Though he is a veteran dialogue director, this is the first time that Frank McDonald has ever had full charge of a picture.

In the capable cast, Kay Linaker, new Broadway "find" plays her first screen role, the leading woman opposite Ricardo Cortez. Martha Tibbetts, Anita Kerry and Joan Blair, all recent graduates from the stage into screen work, were taking their first major picture parts.

MAN FOUND FROZEN IN PETOSKEY SHACK, DIES

John Bernard, found in a snow-filled shack along the Petoskey waterfront last week, sick and nearly frozen to denth, died Monday at Petoskey hospital. His hands and feet had been badly frozen and he was too ill to keep a fire. Friends investigated after missing him for several days.

Political Notice!

To the Voters of Charlevoix:

As a candidate for the office of City Treasurer at the March primaries, I am making a plea for your support—not alone on the ground of ability to perform its duties, but because, for many years, I have faithfully served the community of Charlevoix and the resort district of which it is a part for very inadequate compensation. I have lived in Charlevoix for the greater part of twenty-five years and, if I have never paid taxes on real property, it has been because my income over that period has been insufficient to permit me to own my own home.

While engaged in newspaper work and as Secretary of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, my efforts have been a no inconsiderable factor in bringing a good many thousands of dollars of resort business into Charlevoix that would otherwise have been lost to us. I have been able to interest many transient tourists in staying here for periods of varying length by pointing out the city's attractions and furnishing them with living accommodations. By writing its resort literature and advertisements, I have placed Charlevoix's advantages appropriately before the public and have saved to the city the money that would otherwise have had to be paid for this work.

For the past seven years, I have handled the automobile license business of the Department of State, together with my other duties, for an average income—total from all sources—of less than nine hundred dollars a year, supporting a family of three. During this time, I have collected close to one hundred thousand dollars for the State of Michigan, in small amounts, without the loss of a dollar to the State Department, giving more than the ordinary public service required.

For the above reasons, if for no other, I believe that I am entitled to your consideration at the primaries.

Commendation is due the city street department for the fine job of cleaning up the slush on Bridge and other streets following the thaw of earlier this week. Damage to Michigan orchards by rabbits and mice has been reported to V. R. Gardner, professor of horticulture and director of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Michigan State College, East Lansing. Deep snow is responsible for increased destruction by rabbits since they nibbled away on branches of young trees. Mice were able to dig under the snow and destroy the trunk bark. Farmers who used repellents recommended last fall by the college report no damage. Orchards in which damage is found should be surveyed to determine how much bridge grafting will be necessary.

Cut Masonic Lead by 270 Points As Result of Monday Night Victory

Outscoring their opponents for the second successive week, the Odd Fellows defeated the Masons Monday night in a winter cribbage series session.

Team scores for the nine tables playing were 16,136 for the Odd Fellows and 15,866 for the Masons, a difference of 270 points. Taken from the previous Masonic margin of 769 points, Monday night's score leaves the Odd Fellows still trailing by 499.

Rollie Williams scored 963 points to lead the losers, while Charles Howard's 934 was the Odd Fellow high count.

The series continues Monday evening, March 2, at the I. O. O. F. hall.

FATHER AND SON BANQUET EVENT TONIGHT

Fine Program Arranged for Affair at Methodist Church

The annual Father and Son banquet will be held tonight at the Methodist church, serving to start promptly at 6:30 o'clock.

The committee in charge has announced that 179 places have been prepared without taxing the capacity of the dining room.

Attorney Floyd A. Supp will give the address and Robert F. Sloan will act as toastmaster. William F. Meyers will speak for the fathers and Charles Scott for the sons. There will be a few formalities, but all will join in general glee club singing.

But then kicking a man down the avenue is as dignified as rolling a peanut with your nose the length of a block to pay a losing political wager.

CIRCUIT COURT WILL CONVENE NEXT MONDAY

Jury Drawn But Likely Will Not Be Called Because of Small Docket

The March term of circuit court for Charlevoix county will open Monday, the 2nd, before Judge Parm C. Gilbert, with perhaps the lightest calendar in recent years.

The docket contains one criminal case, nine issues of fact and law, five chancery cases and seven divorce actions.

According to County Clerk Fenton R. Bulow, it is unlikely the jury will be called, due to the difficulty of transportation for jurors and witnesses over winter roads. A jury has been drawn, however, and will be subject to the call of Judge Gilbert, possibly not until April. Court will convene Monday, but only non-jury cases will be heard, it is understood.

GOV. CHASE S. OSBORN GIVES 23 REASONS FOR BRIDGE AT MACKINAC

"Would Do More to Create and Emphasize and Increase the Unity of Michigan Than Any Other Thing"

Urging the Straits of Mackinac bridge as a Michigan centennial monument, the Hon. Chase S. Osborn today sent 23 reasons to Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald why the bridge should be constructed.

"This year and the next and 1937," the former Michigan governar said, "are being devoted to the celebration of the 100th anniversary of Michigan's achievement of statehood. A bridge across the Straits of Mackinac would be a Michigan centennial monument, uniting the two peninsulas in spirit and truth as never before. A bridge could not be finished within the time of the centennial celebration, but it could be innugurated and dedicated and started upon. The Michigan centennial bridge, binding together the two peninsulas would do more to create und emphasize and increase the unity of Michigan than any other thing."

Governor Osborn asserted that he is completely willing to have the state of Michigan build the bridge alone.

Cost Not Prohibitive

"The cost would not be prohibitive. A reduction in road building for five years or at the most 10 years and the use of gasoline tax for such a period as might be necessary would enable the state of Michigan to finance the building of the bridge on its own responsibility and make it completely independent of the federal government.

"Some consider that the federal government — which compelled the Lower Peninsula to take the Upper Peninsula as a part of the state, in lieu of a strip in Northern Indiana and Northern Ohio, thus provoking the so-called Toledo war—is under obligation to the state of Michigan, to connect the Upper Peninsula with a bridge or some adequate vehicular crossing. There is considerable merit to this contention."

Mr. Osborn enumerated the following 23 reason for the construction of the bridge:

1. For more than one-half the year, the Upper Peninsula of Michigan is completely cut off from the Lower Peninsula except for infrequent car ferries whose primary purpose is the crushing of ice and the transportation of occasional passenger and freight trains. A bridge would supply safe and convenient and rapid crossing of the Straits the year around.

People Must Have Vision

2. It has been well said that without vision a people shall perish. It takes little envisionment indeed to realize the complete necessity in the immediate future for an adequate vehicular crossing at the Straits of Mackinac. All one has to do to realize the demand for a bridge is to figure the traffic increase over the last three years. Michigan is being discovered again, and Michigan itself is beginning to learn about the Upper Peninsula and the vast regions beyond it and their values. In this connection the creation of the new National Park in Michigan on Isle Royale would alone be enough to point the need of a bridge.

3. A crossing at the Straits of Mackinac by means of an adequate bridge would change the annular routing of traffic by highway and thus form a new route from the southeast and northeast to the northwest that would avoid the traffic jams around Chicago and elsewhere.

Not Provincial Structure

4. It is not easy to define the boundaries of the regions that would be benefited by such a bridge. It would not be a provincial structure at all. Naturally Wisconsin and Minnesota would be greatly aided. It would accommodate a large portion of the United States, the East, Southeast, Northwest and North—and also Canada. In fact, all who desire to travel the great Northwest—and the volume of traffic is increasing amazingly each year—would be interested in and benefited by a bridge across the Straits of Mackinac.

5. It undoubtedly could be arranged for the bridge contemplated to accommodate both automobiles and railroads.

6. When it is considered that a bridge would provide transportation the year around, the value of the convenience rendered would be quadruply greater and even more than that of any number of fleets of ferries that do not run in the winter time.

Upkeep Half of Ferries

7. It can be reasonably stated that the overhead cost, upkeep, etc., of a bridge would be half of that for a fleet of ferry boats constantly needing to be increased in size and number.

8. The life of a bridge, if kept painted and protected, would be at least 100 years and probably longer. The extent of time would require the building of at least three or four new fleets of ferries.

9. With the constant and rapid increase of traffic across the Straits, the number of ferry boats required 25 years from now would be so great that there would be danger of colliding and other hazards. More dock room would be needed and more expenditure of money in many directions.

Bridge Much Safer

10. A bridge is much safer than a ferry. The Straits of Mackinac teem with water-borne ship traffic during the season of navigation. In the spring and autumn there are thick and dangerous fogs. There is always the danger of collisions. The sinking of one ferry boat would be attended by more loss of life than could be compensated for by the cost of many bridges.

11. Another hazard that would be done away with entirely is that of fire on the ferry boats. A tragedy of that kind on a packed boat could cost great and irreparable loss.

12. A third menace to life that would be avoided by a bridge would be speeding to catch the ferry.

13. The time-saving factor must not be ignored in considering the bridge because it is of first importance. Aside from the individual emergency and desire, there is the general economic saving. Thousands of automobiles crossing annually would be saved an hour. As it is now, waiting for the ferry and crossing on the ferry, consumes on the average more than an hour and 15 minutes. The bridge could be crossed in 15 minutes, leaving a clear saving for each car that crosses of an hour. Multiplied by the number that cross in a single year this gives an impressive extent of time.

14. To my mind the matter of an adequate vehicular crossing will pass the stage of controversy if careful study of the subject is made. The route to be taken is of course debatable. Personally I favor one that would connect with Bois Blanc, Round Island, and Mackinac Island, which would bring these beautiful spots into convenient accessibility as well as the vast Upper Peninsula.

Bridges Are Beautiful

15. The argument that a bridge across the Straits would detract from the scenery is absurd. There are bridges in the world that have been famous for their beauty for centuries, such as the Rialto in Venice, some of the bridges over the Seine in Paris, the Ponte Vaticano at Rome, old London Bridge, the Brooklyn Bridge in America and many others. The bridge could be made architecturally beautiful and thus add instead of detracting.

16. From an engineering standpoint, the bridge is completely practical and practicable and at a cost that is small compared with the values that would be returned by such a structure.

17. The ideal bridge would be one free from toll, making it a part of the federal and state highway systems and no more subject to toll charges than any other portion or unit of the systems are.

18. There has been on the part of some the idea that the bridge connecting the two peninsulas would be simply an affair of the state of Michigan. I am completely willing to have the state of Michigan build the bridge alone. The cost would not be at all prohibitive. A reduction of road-building for five or at most 10 years and the use of the gasoline tax income for such a period as might be necessary would enable the state of Michigan to finance the building of a bridge on its own responsibility and make it completely independent of the federal government.

U. S. Under Obligation

19. Some consider that the federal government — which compelled the Lower Peninsula to take the Upper Peninsula as a part of the state, in lieu of a strip in Northern Indiana and Northern Ohio, thus provoking the so-called Toledo War—is under obligation to the state of Michigan to connect the Upper Peninsula with a bridge or some adequate vehicular crossing. There is considerable merit to this contention.

20. There has always been more or less of an idea in the minds of the people of the Upper Peninsula that the Lower Peninsula has never accepted them completely. This may be a phantasm, but whatever of that feeling exists would be completely removed by the building of a bridge or some adequate vehicular crossing that could be used all the year. In a sentimental way, perhaps, but yet in the field of human consideration and patriotic feeling, the unifying effect of a bridge across the Straits of Mackinac, upon the people of Michigan and those interested beyond the confines of the state, would alone warrant the structure.

21. The bridge is certain to be built some time. The sooner this is appreciated, and the sooner it is built the better it will be for the development of all the country influenced.

22. Someone criticizes me for being convinced of the necessity of a bridge too late to get some of the government money that is being expended over the United States. It is not too late for that, if it is desirable. However, I wish to repeat and emphasize that I would like to see Michigan build the bridge alone and make it a Michigan contribution to the north country and to America.

A Centennial Monument

23. This year and next year and 1937 are being devoted to the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of Michigan's achievement of statehood. A bridge across the Straits of Mackinac could be a Michigan Centennial Monument, uniting the two peninsulas in spirit and in truth as never before. A bridge could not be finished within the time of the Centennial Celebration, but it could be inaugurated and dedicated and started upon. The Michigan Centennial Bridge, binding together the two peninsulas, would do more to create and emphasize and increase the unity of Michigan than any other thing.

STATE FAIR WILL STAGE CENTENNIAL EXHIBIT, PROGRAM

George A. Prescott, Jr., secretary of Michigan State Fair, has advised the Michigan Centennial Joint Committee that the outstanding feature of the State Fair this year will be a grand celebration of Michigan's Centennial of Statehood.

"The celebration at the State Fair will be a fitting tribute to the memory of those sturdy pioneers who paved the way for the remarkable progress of Michigan, and complimentary recognition of the industrious men and women who have carried on and are still with us to view with justifiable pride their wonderful achievements," said Secretary Prescott. "It will also serve as a grand finale to the series of splendid local Centennial celebrations held throughout the state during 1935 and this year, a centralized observance of the state's 100th birthday."

Included in the program will be most elaborate exhibit of historical relics ever assembled from all parts of the state as the background for more extended displays depicting the progress of Michigan in agriculture, industry, transportation and commerce during the past 100 years. Michigan history and progress also will be depicted in spectacular pageantry and allegorical parades.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS
By Ann Page

Butter-and-egg are high due to continued cold and stormy weather. Egg prices will drop sharply as soon as better weather prevails.

With the arrival of Lent there is an increased interest in fish. Bad weather has made fresh fish almost unavailable so that the choice consists of frozen, salt, smoked and canned. Canned salmon is liked by most people and can be used in a great variety of ways. Red Salmon and pink are interchangeable in practically any recipe. Red salmon is less plentiful and much more expensive. It has the advantage of a more attractive color, somewhat more fat and more of the fat-soluble vitamins A and D.

There are excellent values in lamb and beef, in many vegetables and in apples, oranges and Anjou pears.

Here are three menus for Sunday dinner at different budget levels.

Low Cost Dinner

Boiled Potatoes Spinach

masses of the hills, and through the full wide valley of the Santa Clara

There Was a Smell of Grass and Earth.

There was a smell of grass and earth, and of dust and the sharp dews—aromatic, primitive, reminiscent.

"It makes me feel like a little girl again to be going home in the gloaming like this."

"How simple it all was for us, then."

"Wasn't it? And maybe when one gets to be very old, Larry, eighty or so, it all goes back to that, to being happy and managed and taking every day for every day."

"I love that mind of yours, Tony—the way it works."

For a while there was silence, while the miles flowed by. Presently the girl said:

"Would Ruth mind this?"

"She would surely mind how we feel about each other," Larry answered.

"Yes, of course! But I was wondering what she would have said if I had said quite openly, 'Larry, take me along!'"

"She might not have suspected anything at all."

"Unless Caroline prompted her."

"Well—that, of course. But do you think Caroline suspects?"

"I don't know. Sometimes I think she does." Again there was a long musing silence, then Tony said: "Larry, when I'm with you I feel tremendously brave. I could do anything, because you're there to approve. But the minute we're separated I feel so flat and stupid. I feel like screaming: 'Oh what's the difference? Who cares!' So I know how I'll feel tomorrow," the girl went on, earnest and fragrant and confidential in the darkness, with her arm through his, and her face against his shoulder. "And I have to make unchangeable plans now, and stick to them no matter how I feel when this is over."

"We'll have dinner now." They had turned off the highway to stop at a little roadside restaurant whose windows were gushing light into the night. There was an entrance through an iron gate; there were patios and arcades and a small table by a fire. The place was deserted. The old waiter who presently brought them minestrone and toasted sour Italian bread told them that they were the evening's only guests.

"No get trade till hot weather," he said. Tony was ravenous and found everything delicious; food brought her back color and spirit; she rested her elbows on the table and smiled across it at Larry.

"This is Italy, Larry, and we are on our travels."

"Will you go to Italy with me, Tony?"

"Not now. No; there's no happy ending for us," Tony said.

"There may be."

"It's so horribly to have it depend on someone's death, Larry. It oughtn't to be that way. Do you suppose most persons' happiness depends on someone's death?"

"I suppose it does depend on Ruth's death—that's horrible," the man said, looking up with a smile.

"One always says 'unless something happens.' But it always means 'unless someone dies.'" Tony mused on this for a moment. "No, I'll not do that. So this is our last little party, Larry. I couldn't trust myself for much of this one. One of these moony nights I'd want to give in—more than anything else—Hendy, or Mother, or what people think of me, or what I think of myself—

"It would all vanish like fog. I'd think, 'It's my business and Larry's and nobody's else!'"

"And isn't it?"

"You know it's not. But the moral of it is," Tony said with a rueful laugh, "I can make all the resolves in the world, while I'm with you, and the minute we're separated I'm sick. It is really like a sickness, Larry, just to hear your voice again.

"I wish there were some other way out."

"Yes, because this really isn't any way out."

The enchanted talk went on and on. Tony's right elbow was resting on the table, and her chin in her hand; her left hand lay free, and after a while Larry's big brown hand was over it, firm and strong, and he had moved his chair about so that their shoulders were almost touching. When Tony raised her heavy dark eyelashes and brought the glowing soft light in her blue eyes to meet his look, she found his own eyes close.

A late and jubilant party had come into the little restaurant; they were shouting, drinking, dancing. Tony and Larry saw nothing of them; they were deep in their own murmured confidences. There was no time, no space, no world but the world of their own hearts.

The clock on the wall said ten, said eleven, and still their eyes, their hands, their souls were locked together, still they sat on in the obscure corner of the dining room with the plain white cloth stained with red wine, and the cheese and the apple peels littering the disordered plates.

"Larry, will you look at the time?"

"Good God, is it after eleven?"

"And your engagement with Fitch?"

Larry glanced toward the back of the restaurant.

"I'd better telephone him. I can tell him I've had a breakdown. Do you realize we've been sitting here talking for three hours?" the man demanded. "It seems like one."

"It did seem like one." Tony was somewhat concerned until he returned from the telephone booth cheerful and reassuring. "Was it all right?" she asked tearfully.

"Fine. He was just leaving the office; said we could take it up any time tomorrow. He'd telephoned Ruth, at the lodge, and she told him I'd started at six; so he knew I was trying to get there, anyway. I told him I was delayed down here at King City—"

They walked toward the parked car; the world was whitewashed with moonshine now, and very still. There was a fresh smell of dew on dry grass; under each of the great meadow oaks lay a blot of lacy black shadow. Now and then a car raced by, its headlights sending long antennae into the soft clear night; every old barn and shed was transfigured in the magic silver light; the eastern mountains and the rising oak-clothed hills were furry and soft in unearthly and mystical radiance.

"Fog all gone," Tony said, in her place on the front seat again. "It's straight ahead now. We ought to be in by three?"

"Sooner than that. We'll be in San Jose in about an hour, and then it's only an hour and a quarter."

"Hello!" he said suddenly, rousing her.

"We're bumping," said Tony.

"Bumping! Great Scott, what a flat!" Larry got out of the car, walked about it. "Our right rear is as flat as a pancake," he said. "I must've got a puncture way back there, and the tire's been leaking air ever since we started. And fool that I am, I've no spare!—No spare, and miles to go!"

"Well, there wasn't a garage, even back at the restaurant," Tony said.

"No, but I could have telephoned one. Damn it!" Larry said under his breath. "We'd have to stop someone and get them to telephone. I don't know how far a garage is or where there is one. This may delay us. However," he added philosophically, "we've lots of time now, cheerio!"

Tony got out and walked about the car in her turn; looked up at the wide pale gray spread of the sky and the pulsing stars.

"Light as day," she said.

"Here comes a car—ladies, driving along pretty fast, too—no, they won't stop; they've heard too much of roadside robbers," Larry laughed, impressive in his tan coat, with his thick black hair uncovered. "Here—here we are!"

A small car stopped; a man's spectacled face peered out. There was a woman with a baby in her lap beside him; another woman looked out from the back of the car. Tony knew this other woman's face, tried to place it; it had a vaguely unpleasant association, somehow.

"I don't believe there's a garage open this side of San Jose now," the man said, sympathetically. "It may be an hour before help gets back to you."

"Wait a minute—that house up the road there is lighted—funny thing too, as late as this—there must be sickness," said Larry. "We'll walk up there and use their telephone."

"I really think you'd save time."

"Who is that woman?" Tony thought, shuddering a little in the first feeling of cold. "I know that face!"

"Come on, we'll go telephone," Larry told her, as the little car drove away. "And then we'll come back and wait in the car. I've got an extra coat there, and I'll wrap you up."

A thousand times in the days that followed Tony was to wish that she had prevented him, had suggested that they wait for a bus; there were buses going up and down these roads, even though it was only at long intervals. A thousand times she would remember this moon-washed night with horror; she would go back to this moment and long, with a passionate longing that was like a physical drag upon her whole being, to have it to live over again.

No kindly premonition arrested their feet as they walked along the fragrant highway, turned in at a plum-guarded ranch gate, and approached a pleasant four-square wooden home draped in rose vines and shaded by two great oaks. "Oak Lawn," said a sign over the entrance steps. The hallway and an upper room were lighted, at twelve o'clock on a quiet Monday night. Larry rang the bell.

There was no answer; he tried the door.

"It's open; there's someone here. They wouldn't go away and leave the place lighted up," he said to Tony, ringing again.

Again there was no response; far upstairs they could hear a child crying.

"There's a baby in there somewhere, Larry. They've gone away and left it."

"Wait—here's someone." Footsteps were coming along the hall; the lock rattled, and a pale young man looked out.

"What do you want?"

"May I use your telephone, please? We've got a flat, and there doesn't seem to be any garage near here."

The young man looked at them, blinking.

"It's out of order—" he began. Then his manner changed. He clutched his temples, dug the heels of his palms into his eyes, and burst into bitter weeping. "Come in," he sobbed, "my wife's just been murdered! I don't know what to do."

PUBLIC ENEMIES

Cyclops, the original One-Eyed Monster, used to make things miserable for wayfarers who crossed his path.

His present-day counterpart, the motorist, who drives around at night with only one light burning, is many times more dangerous.

Good drivers always carry spare bulbs to replace worn out ones just as soon as they "go dead."

COULD NOT DO HER HOUSEWORK

WHEN everything you attempt is a burden—when you are nervous and irritable—at your wit's end—try this medicine. It may be just what you need for extra energy. Mrs. Charles L. Cadmus of Trenton, New Jersey, says, "After doing just a little work I had to lie down. My mother-in-law recommended the Vegetable Compound. I can see a wonderful change now."

Third Discussion In Child Care Project Announced

Fathers and mothers of Charlevoix county who enrolled in the child study groups conducted by the Extension Division of Michigan State College will this month study the play life of children. This lesson will be presented in the East Jordan community rooms on Thursday, March 5, promptly at 10 o'clock.

Mrs. Lynde, the specialist who is training these leaders of these groups, tells us that we must get away from the habit of thinking of children's play as recreation. It is the child's work. Play is nature's device for developing the organism, for when our children play they are developing themselves physically, mentally and socially. Parents should encourage play through carefully selected toys. They should value the possibilities of the gang under a little guidance and they should not always condemn their children for fighting.

These elements and others concerning the daily play activities of our children will be thoroughly analyzed and suggestions worked out for the home use of play and family recreation. Any one interested in sharing in these discussions may be assigned to a group near at hand by calling the County Extension Office.

Important Notice to Fruit Growers

Due to the deep snow in the fields, the fruit grower should take precaution against the splitting of young fruit trees. This snow being deep enough to cover the lower branches and crotches, there is considerable danger of breakage as the snow begins to melt. As the snow begins to freeze and thaw, ice will be formed on the lower branches and the weight or drag of the ice will be great enough to break the branches or split the crotches.

The remedy to prevent this danger of breaking and splitting of branches is a simple one if it is applied before the snow begins to freeze and thaw. The remedy is that of walking around each tree and tramping down the snow so that it will not freeze on the branches as it begins to melt.

This should be done as soon as the weather warms up enough so that the snow begins to crust over, but not until after the danger of drifting is over.

Charlevoix County Shows Interest In 4-H Club Work

Last week, which was spent in Charlevoix county, was devoted to working with leaders and club members on their different projects.

It was very impressing, the manner in which the work has been organized by Mr. Mellencamp, your county agricultural agent. Much interest has already been created, which is shown by the large enrollment of over 300 members in the various clubs, namely handicraft, clothing and hot lunch.

It is interesting to note that some of the school boards are buying equipment so that this type of work can be carried on more efficiently. These boards have realized that the work done by boys' and girls' hands plays an important part in their educational program.

The high quality of leadership in Charlevoix county is very noticeable.

Some time in March another week will be spent in this county, at which time it will be interesting to notice the progress made on the different projects.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (Luke 1:32): "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 332): "Jesus was the son of a virgin. WILD LIFE

The anxiety which has been felt over wild life in Michigan during the worst winter season in years has been fully justified. The Conservation Department and sportsman's organizations should be praised for their efforts to relieve the sufferings of every outdoor creature. To protect the dwellers of woods and fields and streams is of first importance to every citizen. When the forces of nature are added to the agencies of destruction furnished by man there is promise of a ghastly toll. We must preserve wild life not only as a natural resource worth millions, but for the enrichment of health and pleasure that goes beyond any estimate in dollars.

CHARLEVOIX WINS EAST JORDAN TILT

CLOSED SEASON WITH 17 TO 11 VICTORY FRIDAY

Team Had Spotty Season, Winning 7 Out of 15 Games — Reserves Completed Excellent Record

Charlevoix's Red Rayders completed their pre-tournament basketball schedule Friday night with a 17 to 11 win over East Jordan, a victory which evened the season's count between the two teams.

Charlevoix played fine ball to beat the Jordanites on their own hardwood, not an easy task considering the small floor. Well-timed passing and fine coordination brought about the victory.

It looked for a time like a repetition of the contest played here when Jordan led at the quarter 6 and 4 after Charlevoix had scored first. The second period was the turning point, however, when Charlevoix jumped into a lead and were never again headed. They were in front 12 to 8 at the half and held a narrow 12 to 10 margin at the third intermission. While Jordan fought desperately to ward off defeat in the final period, Charlevoix took advantage of their wildness to add five more points to Jordan's single free toss.

Charlevoix reserves were winners also, copping the close preliminary contest by a 19 to 17 count.

The score by quarters:

Charlevoix	4	8	0	5—17
East Jordan	6	2	2	1—11

Season's Spotty Record

From a standpoint of games won and lost, the season just closed was one of the most unsuccessful for Charlevoix in several years. The team, sometimes playing brilliant ball and other times badly off form, won seven out of 15 games. They lost the first six games successively, then struck an unbeatable stride to win the next five, including victories over Traverse City and Alpena, Class B schools. Apparently "on their way," the team was knocked off by Boyne and East Jordan in succession and then wound up the season with wins over Harbor and East Jordan.

The following record shows the season's results:

Charlevoix 14, Ellsworth 30.
Charlevoix 15, Pellston 17.
Charlevoix 18, Traverse 21.
Charlevoix 19, Petoskey 26.
Charlevoix 13, Grayling 19.

Charlevoix 21, Mancelona 11.
Charlevoix 10, Boyne City 13.
Charlevoix 21, East Jordan 32.
Charlevoix 14, Harbor 9.
Charlevoix 17, East Jordan 11.

Reserves Have Good Record

Charlevoix's reserves, which include some mighty promising material for future varsity teams, completed a good season's record, winning seven and tying one game out of nine games. The record follows:

Charlevoix 19, East Jordan 17.
Charlevoix 16, Harbor 14.

ICE JAM BLOCKS BOYNE RIVER AT LAKE STREET

Grim visaged winter settled its grip on the Boyne River several weeks ago and made an ice dam at the Lake street bridge. The water backed up into the park and the dam was reduced with dynamite. Never before in the recollection of the older inhabitants has a like situation prevailed.—Boyne Citien.

In Appreciation

I wish to thank my friends for the loyal support given me at the primary election. Grace Geneit.

FINE TALENT ON LEGION AMATEUR BILL

WIDE VARIETY OF ENTERTAINMENT PROVIDED

Joe Dvorak, Accordionist, Francis Peters, Violinist, Margery Edwards and Bob Wexstaff Winners

(By F. V. Tyler)

Charlevoix became the "honor city" last Friday evening, when "Major Bowes" Hamlin rapped the gong for attention at 8:30 p. m. and the great Legion Amateur Night was on.

Eighteen contestants made their timid debut before an audience of some 500, gathered in the high school gymnasium. The acts ranged all the way from recitations to harmonica music and tap dancing and back again to boxing and old time fiddling.

First prize winner was Joe Dvorak, who was awarded five dollars for an accordion solo that the audience thought was the "tops." Francis Peters came second with an old time fiddling stunt that brought down the house. His take was three dollars. Bobby Wexstaff and Margery Edwards were easily third place with their picturesque and interesting tap dance. Their prize was two dollars.

Other numbers that did not win prizes but do deserve honorable mention are the singing of Alice, Lizzie and Harry Brock and their second number, in company with Mildred Mitchell; Miss Mitchell's own recitation, which was a separate number; Harry Oldham and the two O'Brien boys who form his orchestra, the "Hillbilly Players," and Harry's special guitar solo and song; also that of Kenneth Staley, a fourth member of the Hillbillys; Isaac Denemy on the harmonica (Ike is a member of the high school harmonica band and has only taken a few lessons); Wanda Adams, with an clever tap dance and song; the two Bilow brothers, styling themselves the "Michigan Cotton Pickers," who played guitars, one doubling on a mouth organ (this was a special comic feature that caused much amusement); Bob Crampton, former Golden Glove boxing champion, in a special tap dance; a lone lady singer, who preferred to remain anonymous behind dark glasses and a big hat; Marjorie Smith, who did a special dance and song, and, last but not least, the Russell brothers, who put on a snappy two round boxing bout which the fans claimed was O.K.

There was an excellent attendance and the officers and members of Leslie T. Shapton Post want to thank those who contributed their efforts to make the affair a success and the public who so generously supported it.

Ray S. Hamilton Returned as City Clerk, Robert E. Rife Wins Nomination for City Treasurer, George W. Weaver Becomes Third Ward Supervisor as Near Record Vote Is Polled

Returning to city politics after an absence of three years, Arthur Bergeon won the Republican nomination for mayor at Monday's primary election by a margin of 277 votes over Leonard P. Adams, the incumbent.

In view of the quietness of the pre-election campaigning, Monday's poll of 1069 votes, the third largest primary vote on record, was somewhat surprising.

Bergeon, who formerly served the city as mayor for twelve consecutive terms, carried all but one of the city wards. He was defeated by seven votes in the first precinct, carried the second by 175, and the third by 109.

Following is the vote by wards:

2nd Ward—
Bergeon	334	Adams 165
3rd Ward—
Bergeon	247	Adams 138
Total	667	390

Ruy S. Hamilton, veteran city clerk, won in a close race by a margin of 41 votes over Charles H. Lamphear, who previously has held the office. Hamilton won majorities in the first and third wards, while Lamphear carried the second precinct.

The ten-way race for city treasurer resulted in the return to office of Robert E. Rife, who has a margin of 177 votes over Grace Geneit, his closest opponent. Horace R. Fowler trailed Mrs. Geneit by nine votes for third place.

In the ward contests, George W. Weaver defeated David J. Eckinger, incumbent, for the office of supervisor in the third ward. Ernest J. Kibbe returns to the council again by victory over Harley I. Ochs for the second ward office vacated by F. J. Fessenden. Otherwise present office holders were victorious.

FATHER AND SON BANQUET WAS FINE AFFAIR

Outstanding Program Given Thursday Night at M. E. Church

One hundred and sixty-nine men and boys were seated at the recent Father and Son banquet at the Methodist church. The ladies served an especially fine meal, both excellent in quality, and ample in quantity.

Robert Sloan was very efficient and clever as toastmaster, W. F. Meyers made a fine speech for the fathers, and Charles Scott, selected on merit by the high school authorities, pleased everybody with his address "To Our Fathers." Floyd A. Supp gave the final address, which was a real "father and son" address, planned for the occasion, and very appropriate. He said some very worth-while things that all fathers and sons should ponder. His illustrations were very interesting, and his standard of what constitutes real greatness, even in humble positions, was highly commendable.

After a some general singing, Charles Hamlin sang two beautiful solos, which were very appropriate in their selection and were much appreciated.

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT

Whether March roared in like a lion or danced in like a lamb was a matter of minor importance in comparison to the fact that Sunday marked the beginning of March and the end of February. That the month just past was one of the cruelest Februarys in many years has been accepted without a doubt and its departure has left no pangs of regret.

Generally higher temperatures have prevailed during the first few days of March as indicated by the following readings made available by the U. S. Coast Guard station:

	High	Low
Wednesday	27	22
Thursday	20	12
Friday	33	10
Saturday	15	2
Sunday	20	7

HIGH SCHOOL IS AGAIN ACCREDITED BY U. OF M.

Given Highest Rating by Michigan Institution Following Inspection

According to Supt. O. P. North, Charlevoix High school has again been accredited by the University of Michigan with the highest rating for a period of three years.

This recognition, providing the continuance of diploma relations which have been in effect for a period of 30 years, is the result of a recent inspection by officials of the State Department of Public Instruction. A communication from the department following the inspection highly commended the local school system.

RAIL TAX IS 41% CO. SCHOOL FUND

RAILROAD LEAGUE REPORTS AID TO EDUCATION

On Basis of 4,545 Students in County, Railroads Pay for Education of 1,863, or 41%, Claimed

Of the 4,545 school children in Charlevoix county the education of 1,863, or 41 per cent is made possible largely through railroad taxes, according to Floyd E. Drake, executive secretary, Michigan Railroad Employes and Citizens League.

Charlevoix county is receiving $50,585 as its share of the state primary school fund, Drake explains, or at the rate of $11.13 per school child. Of the $15,492,385.59 in the 1935-36 fund the railroads through taxes paid $6,301,907.10, or a sum equal to 41 per cent of the total. On this basis railroad taxes made up $20,577 of this county's share of the fund.

"The railroads' tax contribution to the support of our state schools is another reason why the railroads, which play so vital a part in our economic life, should not be compelled to continue excessively regulated while they have to combat unregulated competition. The rails need understanding assistance if they are to function as is expected of them, and if their aid to our primary school fund is to continue. To help the lines obtain that assistance and incidentally at least to assure future contributions by them to our school fund is the aim of our railroad employes and citizens league."

MICHIGAN'S PEACH CROP HIT BY COLD

Estimate Damage Will Be In Excess of Million Dollars

The value of the 1936 peach crop will be cut one-half, or nearly $1,000,000, as a result of the severe cold weather this winter, C. A. Boyer, assistant horticulturist for the State Department of Agriculture, has announced.

The sub-zero temperatures killed virtually all buds from Bangor north to Holland. Damage was especially heavy in Allegan, Van Buren and Ottawa counties. Boyer said indications point to a substantial reduction of the crop in the northern half of Berrien county and also in the Romeo and Sparta peach raising districts.

CAGE TOURNAMENT OPENS THURSDAY

CLASS C AND D ELIMINATION AT BOYNE CITY

Charlevoix Drew Bye in First Round Meet Winner East Jordan-Boyne Game Friday Night

Interest of basketball fans will turn this week to Boyne City, scene of the annual district Class C and D tournament.

Thirteen teams, five in Class C (including Charlevoix) and eight in Class D, will compete Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 5, 6 and 7, for one place in each class in the regional tournament at Petoskey a week hence.

Only the most optimistic would even attempt to dope out the Class C winner. There are Charlevoix, Harbor Springs, East Jordan, Boyne City and Central Lake, the latter a newcomer in Class C competition. Charlevoix has won from and been defeated by both East Jordan and Boyne City. Charlevoix twice beat Harbor Springs, a team which nipped both East Jordan and Boyne City. So try to figure it out!

Harbor, from the standpoint of the draw, should certainly reach the finals, for Central Lake, beaten by several Class D teams who do not even rate with the Class C schools, is the only obstacle in the way. Boyne drew East Jordan and that game will be a battle, with Boyne having the advantage of playing on their own floor. Charlevoix plays the winner of the contest and the victor goes to the finals. That's the Class C lineup.

In Class D the outstanding team is Pellston, last year's district and regional champions and runner-up in the state finals. Max Novak coaches the team and they have been bowling over Class D, C and B rivals all season. From Antrim county comes the undefeated Bellaire outfit. It looks like a Pellston-Bellaire finals in Class D.

Here is the tournament schedule:

Thursday

Thursday afternoon at 2:45 Alanson plays Pellston High school, and at 4:00 Wolverine takes on Mackinaw City. At night, 7:00, Alba meets Boyne Falls, Bellaire and Ellsworth play at 8:15, and Boyne City clashes with East Jordan at 9:30.

Friday

Friday afternoon, 2:45, brings together the winners of the Alba-Boyne Falls and Bellaire-Ellsworth tilts. At 4:00 Harbor Springs will play Central Lake. Friday night, 7:30, will see the winner of Alanson vs. Pellston collide with either Wolverine or Mackinaw City. At 8:45 Charlevoix swings into action for the first time in the tournament, against the Boyne City-East Jordan victors.

Championship Games Saturday

Saturday night will mark the final games between the two surviving teams in Classes C and D, for the district championships.

Students: Admission — 20 cents; finals—25 cents; student season tickets—75 cents.

Adults: Admission — 35 cents; finals—50 cents; adult's season ticket—$1.25.

MASONS VIRTUAL WINNERS CRIBBAGE SERIES

Scored 619 Points Margin for Series Lead of 1,118 Monday Night

Winning by a margin of 619 points Monday night, the Masons virtually sewed up the annual winter cribbage series with the Odd Fellows. With only one more contest remaining in the series, the Masons are leading a total of 1,118 points.

Monday night's scores, with nine tables playing, were 16,282 for the Masons and 15,663 for the Odd Fellows. On the basis of the number now playing in the series, it would be almost impossible for the Odd Fellows to overcome the Masonic lead.

High scores for Monday night were posted by George Weaver with 964 for the Masons, and Elliot Lewis with 913 for the Odd Fellows.

The final contest will be held Monday evening, March 9th, at the Masonic temple.

TEMPERANCE GROUP ANNOUNCE TEA FOR FRIDAY

CORRESPONDENCE

NORTH COUNTY NEWS

Nice snow storm Monday. Roads are blocking again.

Mrs. Zibe DeForest is improving from her attack of pneumonia.

Andy Dunsmore has been confined to his home again with illness.

Theodore Luiselle, of Torch Lake, was a business caller in Central Lake Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Dawson, of Ellsworth, were callers at the Harvey Brouwer home at Eastport last Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Harry Mason is somewhat improved from her recent illness. Until they get a license, they are held up at home with their car again.

Philip Mudge was in Bellaire last week and purchased his car license. He visited last Sunday at the Charles Stott home at Antrim City. He had to walk in from Atwood.

Edward Dawson is home again from the South Mancelona cordwood camp. The camp had to close, as well as several others near Mancelona on account of the deep snow.

Rev. A. A. Wall, Central Lake teaching force, J. A. Triplett and wife, Orin McPherson and wife, and A. A. Wall and J. W. Morse attended Teachers' Association at Mancelona last week Wednesday.

Miss Phyllis Swanson, of Torch Lake shore, took her usual hike of about 15 miles to attend Holiness church at Bellaire last Sunday. The Conley boys, east of Central Lake, walk to Bellaire to church, too.

Blaine Wilson, editor of the Torch, and Mr. Aiken, were callers at Bellaire last Saturday. Mr. Aiken has been quite ill with stomach trouble. Mr. Jones, with whom he is stopping in Central Lake, is not very well.

O. R. Morse and family visited Sunday at the John Dawson home in town. Mr. Morse is considerably improved in health. The boys with Lester Dawson put up 100 cakes of ice last week Wednesday in about five hours, and drew it two miles.

Johnnie and Wellington DeForest have been putting up ice at the resort cottages along Torch Lake the last week. The job was finished Saturday. Charles Austin and the Morse boys put up ice for Mrs. Hildreth's cottage on Torch Lake last Friday.

Miss Dorothy Zimmerman conducted the young people's meeting at Central Lake Pentecostal last week. Fifty-nine were in attendance at Sunday school a few weeks ago. Rev. Snider and wife have been changing pulpits at Central Lake and East Jordan. Good crowds have been attending.

Mrs. Rouch had a load of about eight in her car when she arrived at Eastport Baptist church last Sunday. She preached an excellent sermon. Rev. Rouch stayed in Charlevoix as he was not feeling very well. An effort is being put forth by the church for three months to get more tithing assistance.

Many relatives and friends were much surprised to hear of the passing Saturday morning of Frank Malone, Sr., who had been a resident of Central Lake for quite a few years. Intestinal cancer was the cause, it is said. Mr. Malone had been manager of the canning factory here for years. He was appointed receiver when it was sold to Mr. Gill. He lately had been manager of relief work.

Who the new postmaster will be at Central Lake, up to now, has not yet been decided. Mr. Malone and William Alberts appear to have been leading candidates, and each got many signers on their petitions. With the passing of Mr. Malone, it appears to leave it up to Mr. Alberts as Democrat candidate. He did a lot of work for the party in recent campaigns. We have not heard of a dissenting voice in favor of having the present postmaster, William Bowers, retained. He has given excellent services, together with Mrs. Bowers, Mrs. Welford Davis and Mr. Boice, and they have made many friends, and your correspondent certainly would like to see them stay. Reports that a Mancelona candidate would get the position, we are officially informed, is just talk, as the applicant must be a resident of the district in which the office is situated.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Stafford made a business trip to Traverse City Tuesday.

Although Miss Baumbach has not missed a day of school this school term, she reports more snow there than in our locality.

Mrs. William Alwara entertained a group of ladies at her home Friday evening at a rehearsal party. The ladies are presenting the play entitled "Sarah Perkins' Hat Shop," March 17th, in Norwood. After rehearsing, the guests enjoyed the remainder of the evening in sewing and games, after which the hostess served delightful refreshments.

The young people of the Christian Reformed Church here have organized a chorus to sing an Easter cantata, "Life Eternal," by Norwood Dale. They have an enrollment of some 34 male and female voices. Rev. Holwarda is directing.

Tuesday afternoon, this district will vote on the issue of a rural agricultural school, which will mean consolidation. The issue has been the object of much debate hereabouts, both pro and con, some of it quite heated, and from discussion here, it would seem to carry. At least it is to be hoped for, for it will improve community, school and social life here.

We have not been in print the past few weeks, which can be easily understood if one sees the banks of snow here in town yet. Somewhere we have read Whittier's "knee deep in June"; we were shoulder deep in February's snows, at times all traffic was at a standstill, and the temperature stood at 28 below zero at times. As late as last Sunday it was 22 degrees below, so of course, with the weather thus, there is little or no news.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

Campaign to Eliminate Bot Flies In Horses Highly Successful

The campaign conducted in the county during the last three months has been very successful. In fact, the number of horses and colts treated exceeded the goal set in the beginning. The results have certainly justified the small expense of 50 cents per head. Many farmers have already reported that their horses are in better condition and taking on weight, which, of course, is one of the main reasons for the elimination of bot flies and other internal parasites.

Dr. D. F. Newman, of Charlevoix, has been in charge of the work. Last December 159 were treated around the Charlevoix district. During January the east end of the county was pretty well covered. Then, on account of the road conditions, no work was attempted until last week.

From the last census we find that there were 2100 horses and colts in the county, so 20 per cent of all horses have been treated, which is highly gratifying. Another year it is hoped that a much greater number will be treated because it means dollars and cents to the owner.

Some men can't keep their hair and others can't keep their money.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Infant Mortality Dist. No. 3 in 1935 by Cause and Age

A study of the infant mortality in District Health Unit No. 3 shows that 60% of all infant deaths occur during the first month of life and 50% of all infant deaths occur during the first week of life; the largest number, of course, occurring during the first day of life. By far, the largest number of causes of deaths, not only of all infants, but those occurring the first day, are due to premature birth. This is due to the fact that premature birth constitutes one-third of our total infant mortality rate and over 50 per cent of our infant deaths that occur during the first week of life. A special article will appear on this subject this coming week.

We have tabulated all causes of infant deaths under one year of age, subdividing those occurring under one month and those occurring from one month to twelve months as follows:

	Und. 1 mo.	1-12 mos.	To.
Premature Birth	16	1	17
Pneumonia	2	8	10
Congenital Malformation	4	1	5
Congenital Debility	2	2	4
Other Dis. Peculiar to Infancy	3	1	4
Violent and Accidental	1	2	3
Injury at Birth	2	0	2
Influenza	1	1	2
Other Dis. of Stomach	1	1	2
Disease of Skin	1	0	1
Diarrhea and Enteritis	0	1	1
Whooping Cough	0	1	1
	33	19	52

During the year 1935 there was a decrease in the infant mortality rate in District Health Unit No. 3, constituting the counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego, over that of 1934, but the rate remained practically the same as that of 1933 and 1932. Again in this article we wish to emphasize the importance of breast-feeding as a life-saving measure for infants. The infant mortality rate is considerably higher in artificially-fed babies than in breast-fed babies. Be sure to notify your physician or county nurse Miss Deane Rinek immediately if the baby is not progressing as well as he should.

CHAPTER XX
(Contiaued from last week)

The Donny murder case took frontpage headlines in all the newspapers the next day, and for mony days to come. Harold Donny was in ao sease an ordinary rancher; he was the scapegrace son of Everard Doany, a wenlthy Pittsburgh steel man. His wife had been the beautiful Zelda Mhoon of Santa Barbara, and their rnnchlng experiment orlghally had been rather in the noture of a high adventure set in n backgronad of ridlng horses, handsome cars, good servants, smart clothes. But they had lost money; they had hnd a baby; there was every reason to suppose that there had been a nervous strain upon both the spotted young husbaad and wife of late yenrs; the aewspopers were agog with theories as to the woman's colduess, the nnn's jealousy, the quarrels and threats that hod gone on in the once luxurious home. The Doanys had had but one servaut in their employ at the time of the murder: a quiet old Mexicaa womaa who had puttered home across the fields at nine o'clock on the fatal night.

Lawrence Bellamy, the well-known associate editor of the Call, who had been motoring home aloae—who had been motoring home with an unknown womon companion at twelve-seveateen o'clock on that eveaing—who had been motoring home with Miss Antolaette Taft, social editor of the Call—had been the person to discover the tragedy ond had quite properly notified the San Jose police. Miss Taft, it appeared from an amlenble statement from Mrs. Bellamy, was a close friend of the Bellamy family and hnd spent the day with them at Pebble Beach.

No hint of scaadal or surprise or blame came from Ruth. Everything had been quite as it should be; she wos devoted to Miss Taft; the whole thing was only so "unfortunate."

Quiet and rather pale, Tony weat through the unreal—the hideous days. She was at the coroaer's laquest, onswering questions simply, with her characteristic little puzzled frown drawing the penciled brows together over her blue eyes. She and Mrs. Bellomy were friends? Great friends. She had spent tbe momentous Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Bellamy in Pebble Beach? Yes.

She told Ahat Meg soaethlag; Brendn a little more. She told Cliff the truth.

"You and he—you mean you and Larry—?" Cliff staaimered.

"Ob, yes."

"And how long's this been going on?"

"Tbere wasn't much to 'go on,' Moaths, I guess," Tony said in reply.

"Well, then, what's the idea of being so decent about it?"

"I don't think it's exactly—deceacy," Tony said, with an effort. "It's just Ruth's idea of the best way out."

"You didn't dine with them that day, then?"

"No, aad neither did Larry. He atarted before dinaer, aad I waited for him at Del Monte, aad he picked me up."

"What time was this?"

"A little after six. We had dinner at King City; we talked for three hours."

"Ha!" Cliff ejoculated. "And she didn't bawl you out?"

"No. She prefers it this way. She's protecting me, and saving him from his own ridiculous folly, and they're all going to China together."

"Will he go?"

"He has to go. Otherwise she'll divorce him."

"Theatens that, huh?"

"She doesn't have to threaten. It's just that—oh, she's not well, and her mother wants to go, and her niece Mrs. Pollemus is going, and if Larry won't come to his senses and go happily along with them—well, she's just done."

"Gosh, what a mess! Maybe he'll throw her dowa?"

"How can he, Cliff? For one thing, she really does love him; she's always been kind to me. And even if he did, that'd finish me. That'd give everyoae a chance to say that I was the girl mixed into the Donny murder and mentioned in the Bellamy divorce."

"Who got you into it in the first place? Didn't Larry put you on a bus that night and send you home?"

"Yes; you weren't here, I remember. Yes, I got tere about three o'clock. But you see the fact of the bus picking me up there at that hour gave them something to work on, and then this Miss Wallster of Oakland gave them my name. She'd been in the car Larry and I stopped before we went to the Donny house."

"Who's she?"

"An Oakland schoolteacher. I did a story about her once."

"The Bellmny outfit's all going away?"

"Chinn."

"When do they go?"

"Day after tomorrow."

"Going to see him before they go?"

"No."

"Will you see him?"

Tony said "no," again, immediately adding: "Yes, he's to come for me here at ten tomorrow, Cliff. We're going off somewhere to talk together. It's good-by, of course. After you're married, I'm going to New York, if they'll send me, and Larry won't, he back until late autumn. We'll never see each other again."

"You poor kid," Cliff said in sudden sympathy. "It's not your fault it had to be Larry you liked! It's rotten for you!"

"You Poor Kid," Cliff Said in Sudden Sympathy.

Tony's face wrinkled, and her lip shook; she looked away, swallowing with a dry throat. She said nothing.

They sat in the parked car and stared out at the sea that was veiled and gray under the fog. It was the quietest hour of the morning; Tony and Larry had the beach to themselves. Now and then a car whirled down the long boulevard behind them; once they heard the slow throb of a plane, high overhead and lost in mist. For the rest there was only the lazy pulsing of the sea and the piping of gulls to break the ominous and brooding silence.

"Is Ruth bitter about it, Larry?"

"On the contrary, she doesn't see, or she won't admit, anything to be bitter about. She's very happy and very affectionate, and grateful to me for going along, and sure I'll love it all!"

"She's taken that position," Tony said, in a hard voice.

"She's—yes. She's taken that position."

The girl's voice was gentler, her blue eyes shadowed, when she spoke again.

"But she knows we love each other?"

"She never had said so. She talks of what the best thing is for all of us. For me, and for you—for all of us."

"Poor Ruth," Tony said; "what other attitude can she take, unless she wants to let you go?"

"Caroline and Mrs. Patterson help her to keep it up."

"Keep up—?"

"The—well, the little fiction that the whole thing is—is just something to be hushed up and forgiven and forgotten."

"Forgiven and forgotten!" Tony said, with the proud color in her face.

"They seem to feel that there is no question that I like you too much and you like me too much," Larry said. "But since it's Larry and Tony, they must be protected and excused. Larry's like that, and poor little Tony didn't know what she was letting herself in for, what gossiping tongues would make of it!"

"I suppose so," Tony said dryly. "Does Ruth believe it?"

"Ruth always believes what she wants to believe. Yes, she believes it. As far as she's concerned it's true. Much the best thing for all concerned is for us to hush it up, and go away."

Tony made no comment. She had taken off her white hat; her dark uncovered hair lay in loose rings and sprays against the man's shoulder. He could look down and see the smooth clear tan of her cheek, where the fine down of a peach showed against the white light of the strange muffled day, and the lowered thick dark eyelashes, and the curve of her fine wide mouth. Tony again was in white today; but her loose soft coat was brown, and the small square pumps braced against the foot rest were brown, too. Larry tightened his arm about her shoulders.

"It won't be forever, Tony."

"No. Somehow — somewhere — the roads will come together again."

"And meanwhile we'll think of each other—and of today."

"Ah, that's what they always say," the girl said with a break in her voice. "And then they forget!"

"I'll not forget. Ah, you're so sweet!" he said, with his lips against her forehead. And then, "Tony, we couldn't just run away from it all?"

"Not from Beady and Bruce and Cliff and Aunt Meg, no. They've all hoped too much for me, done too much for me. It wouldn't be fair."

"It's like a terrible dream that we're together now—that you're safe in my arms here, Tony—and that tomorrow that ache for you—that ache for you, will begin—and there won't be any cure!"

"No matter where we are, no matter what happens, we'll always belong to each other, Larry, won't we?"

"You'll always be what you are now, Tony — the only person in all the world for me."

"And you for me," she said, in a voice she tried to hold steady. "I'll always be glad we had this much, Larry. This is something — this is more than I ever thought I'd have."

"It doesn't seem possible to say good-by," Larry presently said very simply. Tony stirred herself against his arm, drew away.

"Let me look at you, Larry."

They looked gravely at each other: the tall, lean brown-skinned man, with the high-bridged nose and the deep-set eyes, and the girl in her white frock and brown coat, with her dark hair disheveled and her blue eyes set in delicate circles of umber, and fringed with dark lashes that were frankly wet.

"It's good-by, my dear," said Tony.

He put his arms about her, and for a long minute she lay against him, and felt his kisses on her lips.

"You'll forgive me, Tony, for ever letting this happen?"

"Ah, if you'll forgive me! I let it happen. You didn't."

"My wife!" Larry whispered. And straightening herself in her seat beside him again, the girl repeated it with her wet eyes shining.

"Yes—nothing will ever make me anything but that, Larry. The woman that was meant for you."

He touched the starter, turned the car on the short brown grass. They drove back into the city, and at the door of the newspaper office Tony said only another half-audible "good-by." She heard no answer as Larry guided the car into the traffic again and drove away.

She went up to her desk, stopping to hang up her hat and coat, straighten her hair. Her face looked odd to her; it was white. Or perhaps it was only the effect of the foggy light that came in through the high dirty office windows and mingled so oddly with the glow of the lamps.

The newspaper office was very quiet at twelve o'clock. Larry was meeting Caroline and Ruth for lunch and to do some last shopping. A truck would call for the trunks at five o'clock; they would put their nightwear and their hooks and hairbrushes into their handbags tomorrow morning, and the apartment they were abandoning would be full of cheerful conversation. Caroline, have you room for a pair of slippers? Don't put your coat on, Mother darling, you'll be too warm. Ah, here's Joe now!

And so down to the big white ship, and through the pleasant flurry of passports and of finding their staterooms with the clutter and confusion of the waterfront all about them; with the hay steamers pouring soft whistles into the noon air, and the salt water slapping idly against the piers—

She seemed to be hearing his voice again, feeling the tightening of that big arm about her shoulders; she seemed again to see the brown face and the high-bridged nose, and the movement of his brown lean hand when he took off his glasses to look at her—

Tony crossed her arms on her desk and put her head down upon them. Waves of bitterness and longing broke over her, and receded, and strengthened to break over her again.

Yawning, a call boy came in to arch himself like a snake over a telephone. No, the managing editor wasn't there yet—the city editor wasn't there yet. Ring back, please.

"It looks like Doany was going to get the works, don't it, Miss Taft?" said the boy, loitering.

"It begins to."

"Gee, I'll bet it was a kick—you being a witness?"

"It was horrible."

"You bet I'd take a chance!"

He dawdled away, and Tony flattened the curiously assorted notes on her desk; brought her heavy eyes to them. She picked up a pen.

"Mrs. Bainbridge Foster's announcement of the engagement of her daughter, Mary Barbara, was one of the surprises of an unusually gay season. Miss Foster, a debutante of last winter—"

POLLS AS FACT FINDERS

Press reports of a recent survey of public sentiment on the Townsend Plan say it is favored by about three per cent of our population. This report would seem at first glance to be sharply at variance with the claims of Dr. Townsend, who told a convention of Townsendites last October that his voting strength was "growing with amazing speed" and added that if he was left in control of his movement "for another six or eight months, we believe confidently that we shall attain the goal for which we are all striving."

Let us say at once that we are not overly impressed with the results of the multiplicity of polls of public opinion now so much in vogue. As rapidly as the public becomes "poll conscious" these efforts tend to lose their original significance. Even the more ambitious efforts are finding the average man less and less responsive, we believe, with the result that the crank and the man with special interest in the outcome are having an unfair influence on the results.

The less complete canvasses, made by various so-called "sampling" methods, where the returns are subjected to intricate statistical manipulation, are to our way of thinking of still less value.

However, we do not believe that the results of the Townsend Plan poll and the claims of Dr. Townsend are as far apart as they may seem at first reading.

The Townsend agitation is of relatively short life. It is possible for the voting strength of its adherents to show "amazing" growth and still represent but a small segment of the nation.

The Plan was a product of the bluckest days of the depression and its first gains were made when a very large portion of our people had absolutely nothing to lose and everything to gain by supporting almost any new plan.

The improvement in business conditions and the enlargement of the membership campaign to include the more conservative states east of the Mississippi River may have brought the Townsend workers more and more into contact with the type of person who has a job or an investment at stake and who therefore asks with greater frequency, "Where has this plan been tried?" and "What will become of us if it fails?"

We do not understand that Dr. Townsend and his organizers claim the support of a majority of the voters, or consider it necessary to win over a majority in order to put their plan into operation.

The plan is designed to benefit directly only some seven or eight million people, around six per cent of the population. Any others who are to profit must do so indirectly. Much stress is laid by Townsendites upon the great influence which a few millions of well organized voters can have upon our major political parties, and it is our natural conclusion that the Townsend leaders are working for victory at the earliest possible date whether it be before or after a majority of the voters are won over to their way of thinking.

We do not suggest that the number of supporters measures the intrinsic worth of any program, and especially one that is new and untried. Every new idea in government must pass through the stage of infancy. We do believe, however, that it is fair to take the strength of any movement into consideration when estimating the length of time that must elapse before it can reasonably be expected to reach the stage where it will be accepted or rejected as a national policy.

FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

The nation has been enlivened of late by a controversy that broke out without warning between the radio priest and a member of Congress. Perhaps both beligerents used more vituperative language than the situation warranted, we won't discuss that, but what we are interested in is what caused the ruckus. It was over the Frazier-Lemke bill now pending in Congress. The average person knows that the bill is supposed to aid the farm mortgage situation, but we wonder how many people really understand exactly what is proposed.

The bill, as it now stands, provides that farmers having mortgages on their lands shall hold mass meetings in each county and state. A dozen farmers might respond—or a thousand—there is no means of control. These mass meetings shall have the power to elect some of their number to constitute credit boards. The credit boards, in turn, will decide what rate of interest shall be fixed upon the farmers' mortgages, and would have the power to excuse a farmer from paying any interest at all for as long as three years at a time.

That such a law would be fine for the farmer with a mortgage nobody denies. But why single him out as a favored member of society when there are millions of middle-class Americans with mortgages on their homes who are equally as deserving? The radio priest and other sponsors of the Frazier-Lemke bill know that no such system could be operated in a society using money, yet they threaten to drive out of public life those who oppose their unconstitutional and communistic schemes. Such appeals to prejudice and passion are dangerous to our American system of government and should draw an emphatic protest from the people.

A LESSON FOR BUSINESS

The Chicago Daily News concludes an editorial on the TVA ruling with these words:

The TVA decision is, for business men in general and for utility men in particular, a warning that they cannot expect the courts to perform legislative functions. If they fail adequately to present their cases to the people in political campaigns, and neglect to defend their rights before legislative bodies, they must take the consequences. There were many valid objections to the inauguration of TVA that were not properly thrashed out by Congress. On the other hand, the decision emphasizes the importance of freedom of speech in the protection of business rights. The disposition of politicians controlling government bureaus or congressional committees to bully and browbeat business men and corporations that seek to publicize their sides of political controversies is a crime against the spirit of the American Constitution, even if it is, for technical reasons, outside the jurisdiction of the courts. Fearless, aggressive and true publicity is the best weapon, for the defense of private enterprise under the American system. Let us have more of it.

TOURISTS WANT INDIANS

Upper Peninsula boosters have a plan to build an Indian village and to revive Indian arteraft as a phase of the celebration of Michigan's centennial. It is a fine scheme and should not be limited by this special anniversary.

Promoters of Michigan's tourist and resort business have missed a big opportunity in not capitalizing Michigan's treasure in Indian history, lore and tradition. To visitors from other states a romantic glamor is over the Great Lakes region, and this could be greatly intensified if the Indians living in the Northland were shown the advantage of re-establishing something of the primitive village conditions in which their forefathers lived.

The novelty would attract tourists in throngs who would be eager buyers of goods produced by Indian handicraft.

John Collier, commissioner of Indian Affairs, says that the Michigan Indians are "very Indian." There are 2,000 fullblooded members of the race in the state. The mystery and charm of their ancient craft and culture should be conserved and enlisted in bringing prosperity to the Indians and to the resort regions of the state. —Detroit News.

AIR MAIL NEEDED

In Washington the powers that be are making up their various departmental budgets and Charlevoix is particularly interested in the items which will make up the appropriation bill of the Post Office Department and whether these items will include one which will assure Northern Michigan of air mail service during the coming year.

For the past six months Northern Michigan cities have been begging and pleading with post office authorities for establishment of air mail service to this part of Michigan. These pleas were not based merely on community pride or Chamber of Commerce ambition but on a true need for faster mail service.

Northern Michigan's manufacturing and financial institutions need air mail service throughout the year. They are handicapped by slow mail service and are placed under direct disadvantage in their competitive activities with other manufacturers and financial groups which are favored with air mail.

Every summer this region fills up with summer resorters among whom are the biggest industrial and financial names in the United States. These men are restless and more or less unhappy when they attempt to keep in touch with their offices through present mail service.

A government which has shown every indication of trying to promote prosperity and service certainly can find a place in its enormous budget for air mail service to Northern Michigan.

ECONOMIC SECURITY

The mass demand for economic security will grow louder and louder. My fear is that the politicians will hear it, while the business men, industrialists, and financiers will not. If this happens, we shall be in for a generation of legislation that will level the men and enterprises of the United States down to a slimly secure but uninspiring and, in my judgment, ultimately unproductive life even for the masses. I refuse to believe that we are doomed to a destiny of fairly well-clothed and fairly well-fed puppets of an all-embracing state. And yet it is to just this that political pressure from the masses will drive us unless business and industrial leadership promptly and effectively develops a workable and widely effective economies of plenty. I want security for all as ardently as any Stalin wants it, but I want it in terms of a civilization that knows how to correlate security and freedom. As I watch the relentless encroachment of the state, in one European nation after another, upon private enterprises and political liberty, I want more than ever to be able to will to my son an America in which a great economic leadership has made possible the preservation of the inspiring advantages of private economic policies for the distribution of wealth in the light of its technical processes for the production of wealth.—Glenn Frunk.

A WELCOME CHANGE

The old newspaper version that it is news "when a man bites a dog," had a new variant at Lansing the other day when the State Administrative Board voted to loan the Highway Department $1,380,000 out of the general fund to tide it over until the end of the fiscal year. For something like 18 years under the "live off your fat" camaraderie that existed between the several departments of government at Lansing it was not unusual to dip into highway funds when the financial road of the general fund became hard to travel. Although the last Legislature loaded an additional fourteen and a half million dollars in obligations onto state government it has managed to carry the load and still find itself in position to do the rescue act when necessity demanded. Regardless of who or what conditions have made possible this excellent showing in state finances the citizen taxpayer welcomes it as a wholesome change from the old "red ink" days of impecuniosity in state government.

FRESHENING BREEZES

In case you have forgotten about the "abundnent life" there's that boondoggling item of $40,000 to learn society women how to pour tea.

The Detroit woman who dug up 14,600 half dollars to pay for a farm must have been listening in on some of Fr. Coughlin's talks on silver.

California says she won't stand for our bums cluttering up her highways. Some day when we feel real catty we're going to reply to that ultimatum.

Secretary of State Atwood keeps a file of missing men. Including, we presume, the fellow who always handed out the bribe money on the Capitol steps at midnight.

A Detroit woman kept a record of her husband's misdeeds over a period of 15 years that covered four typewritten pages. From the way some of the boys act he was evidently a model husband.

And Now In Closing—

Edward A. Filene, noted Boston merchant, said before the Advertising Club of Boston recently: "Advertising is the voice of business. To think of it as an expense is to misunderstand it. It is as necessary for a business to learn to advertise as it is for a child to learn to walk."

GAME LAW VIOLATIONS LOWEST THIS WINTER

Heavy Snow and Cold Weather Limits Activities of Violators

Conservation law enforcement men at Lansing believe that the extremely cold weather, together with the soft, deep snow in the north, have greatly limited activities of violators, and they point to the January compilation of arrests and convictions as a good indication.

Only 139 arrests were made by Conservation officers during the month mentioned, and of that number 103 were reported from the Lower Peninsula. The majority of arrests in the Lower Peninsula were made in the counties of the southern half where snow conditions have been less severe than in the counties farther north.

In Appreciation

To the Voters of the City of Charlevoix:

I wish to take this means of thanking the voters for their support of my candidacy at the primary election held March 2, 1936.

Sincerely,
Robert E. Rife.

DEER ARE COSTLY TO CLARE COUNTY FARMER

Deer Browse on Trees, Partridge Are Feeding on Buds

The opening of Clare county to deer hunting next fall will be all right with the owner of the DeGus apple orchard.

The 140-acre orchard has been supporting the deer long enough, DeGus believes. At least 30 deer have been visiting the orchard this winter and browsing on the trees. In addition, a flock of nearly 50 ruffed grouse or partridge has been coming in to hud. One partridge examined by a Department of Conservation representative contained 103 apple buds.

DeGus has appealed to the Department of Conservation for relief from the hungry deer and the birds. Last year, it was reported, he spent $100 in feeding the deer during the winter, and this winter he is trying again to divert the deer from his orchard by setting out hay. But it's no use. The deer apparently would rather browse in the orchard.

It may be that the deer will be scattered by hunters when the season in Clare county opens next fall and then the orchard may get a rest, DeGus believes. But in the meantime the deer insist on "yarding" in the orchard and apparently nothing can be done about it.

BREAKFAST SETS TEMPO FOR DAY

Food More Important than Right or Wrong Side of Bed

A good breakfast is the best antidote for those "early-morning blues" according to Roberta R. Hershey, extension specialist in nutrition at Michigan State College, East Lansing.

A cherry atmosphere at the breakfast table is guaranteed to dispel that getting-up scowl which ruins the rest of the day for many people, Miss Hershey declares.

"Did you ever sit down to a breakfast that failed to cheer you up when you were afflicted with the 'early-morning blues'"? she asks. "There is more psychological effect in a plate of piping hot muffins served to your family at 7 a. m. than in volumes of books written on the subject. "A bright atmosphere at the breakfast table will do much toward starting your family off on a happy successful day. Breakfast is obviously the meal of the day that needs special thought and it is the one which usually receives little or none."

Miss Hershey recommends fruit, cereal, breadstuff, an egg, potatoes or griddle cakes and beverages for breakfast for hard working men. Inactive people should have fruit, cereal or breadstuff and a beverage for breakfast, while children should get cereal, easily-digested breadstuff, an egg, and milk in addition to fruit, she insists.

FRUIT SPRAYING WILL BEGIN SOON

County Agent to Distribute Copies of Newly Revised Bulletin

Trees, vines and canes that produce Michigan's annual 15 to 20 million dollar fruit crop are worth the insurance that a wise program of spraying can provide, according to Ray Hutson, professor of entomology, Michigan State College, East Lansing.

He is one of the authors of the "Spraying Calendar" which will be distributed throughout the state within the next few days by county agricultural agents. Copies of the newly revised bulletin can be obtained from B. C. Mellencamp, county agent in Charlevoix county.

As soon as equipment can be wheeled through orchards without getting mired, it is time to apply the season's first dormant spray which will treat such pests as San Jose scale, red mite, oyster shell scale and the pear psylla. In addition to allowing for traction for the spraying equipment the job must also be done when the operator knows that there will be five or six hours when the temperature will not drop before the spraying job is completed. This first dormant spray is applied normally late in March or early in April, depending upon the weather.

Why You Want to Yawn When You See Others Doing It

Pointing out the discovery recently made by scientists which indicates that this useless habit has its origin in an ancient brain center, inherited from our fish ancestors, which is similar to the brain centers that make people blush or go into panics. This interesting article appears in The American Weekly with Sunday's Detroit Times.

PREPARING TO TAKE OVER TOWNSHIP ROADS

Township Road System to Be Abolished by First of April

The State Highway Department this week completed the ground work for the abolition of the township road system in Michigan by April 1.

State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner released a re-certification of all township road mileage in the state. It is on the basis of this re-certified mileage that annual apportionments totaling $4,000,000 a year will be made to the counties under the McNitt township road law.

The $4,000,000 annual return on the basis of the re-certified mileage permits an average expenditure of $64.31 per mile by the counties for the maintenance and improvement of the township roads they will absorb. The average cost of maintaining gravel roads on the state trunkline system is about $690 a mile.

With completion of the transfer of township roads under the McNitt law, the county road commission will have absorbed a total of 581.24 miles of township ronds and will receive from the State Highway Department $37,378.48 yearly for maintenance.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION $5000 MAXIMUM INSURANCE FOR EACH DEPOSITOR MEMBER

IF WE WERE SELFISH

If our policy were dictated by a strictly selfish motive, we would not be urging the people of this community to increase their savings deposit with us at this time.

Frankly it is difficult to place savings deposits in suitable investments which will return a sufficient income to pay the interest on the deposits and the cost of handling them.

Our desire to see our savings accounts continue to increase is because we know it is for the best interest of the entire community that depositors should continue to build a reserve to care for some emergency or for worthwhile later spending.

FORECAST HEAVY MAPLE SAP FLOW

Severe Winter to Aid Farmers Fill Maple Sap Buckets This Spring

Michigan's maple sugar industry can expect a good yield this spring. This is the opinion of Verne H. Church, state agriculturo crop statistician, who has made a special atudy of the industry which will likely be looking for the first sap flow within a few doys.

"Severe winters are usunlly followed by a good maple sugar yield," he says. "Total rainfall and the amount of moisture in the ground determines the amount of flow of maplo augar.

"If the snow and ice thaw out soon so thot farmers can begin tapping the trees shortly we may expect an excellent yield. The sooner tapping is possible the better will be the yield and the quantity."

The season usually lasts four weeks but it varies with the year and weather conditions. In the northern part of the state, it starts several days later thnn in the middle, while the season in southern Michigan opens several days earlier.

DISTRICT HEALTH UNIT BULLETIN

Advice and Care of the Premature Baby

The outstanding cause of infant deaths during the year of 1935 was premature births. We had a total of 17 deaths of infants due to premature birth compared with 11 in 1934 and 12 in 1933. In all probubility the reason for this increase of premature births is due to lack of proper prenatal cnre during the last three months of pregnancy. The eighth and ninth months of prenatal life are very impartant in the growth of the baby and every effort should be made to prevent premature birth. Many babies weighing only two or three pounds can he snved if the proper care is given them. Where a properly cuipped hospital is not availahle, the premature baby must be cared for in the home. The ndvice of a competent physician should be obtained and carefully followed.

In cnring for prematnre babies, there nre three importnnt problems which must be kept in mind constantly: (1) How can he be kept at normal temperature? (2) How can he be protected from infections, and (3) How can he best be fed? A premature baby may die from exposure unless proper care is given him immediately after birth. As soon as he is born he should be wrapped in warm flannel or cotton batton, covering his entire body except his face. He should be placed in a warm bed which is kept in a warm room whose temperature is not lower than 80 degrees F. A thermometer should be kept in the bed with the baby so that the temperature in the bed can be known at any time and this temperature should be between 80 and 90 degrees F. Your county nurse will instruct you as to the making of a home-made heated bed. No one who has a cold or the slightest infection should care for the premature baby.

Until the mother's milk arrives, an effort should be made to get a few ounces of milk daily from some other nursing mother. This milk from the other mother should be boiled for one minute. It is often necessary to feed this milk to the baby by means of a medicine dropper as they are often too weak to nurse. The first day of the baby's life it is best to withhold food for 12 hours. During the second 12 hours the baby may receive three feedings. From then on he should be fed regularly day and night. Such babies fed with a medicine dropper should receive their food at two-hour intervals during the day and three-hour intervals during the night. The total nmount of milk taken daily by the baby should be eual to about one-fifth of its weight.

Additional information concerning the premature baby should be obtained from your local physicians and your county nurse.

EDITORIAL

THE NEW REVOLUTION

It is significant that nuthorized repreaentatives of Townsendism refer to the movement as a "Revolution." We conaider the word to be properly used. The plan envisages the levy of taxotion at rates heretofore unheard of. Such n tax wonld certainly produce a profound effect upon the nation. Their literature mentions the possibility of an increase in prices bectuse of the tax alone nmounting to 10 per cent, nnd it is forecasted that the total dollors and cents volume of business "transactions" to be taxed under the plan will double within a year.

Obvinusly, this cnnnot mean that there will be twice as much goods chnnging hands. It must mean that there is to be n general rise in prices, and whether the rise is to be technically known as nn "inflation" or not, it will produce much the same results.

The effects of rapid fire fluctuntion are no mystery to those who have been fnmiliar with the march of events since the outbreak of the World War. There can he no doubt but that those who live npon the income from mortgages and similar investments, or who are the beneficiaries of life insurance policies are the losers when prices rise. Similarly the laborer and the salaried man invariably find wages and salaries lagging behind any general forward movement in values. Farmers also are pretty well convinced that the things they buy nsually advance in price more rapidly than the things they sell.

Even those who are expecting to receive the pensions that are proposed would probably find that the actual purchasing power of the sums now promised them by the Townsendites will be more nearly 50 per cent than 100 per cent of the present value of the same amount of money.

If our whole economic order is to he subjected to so complete a shake-up within the short span of twelve months, there can be no doubt but that the results will have all the aspects of an economic revolution, to say the least, with great uncertainty surrounding the respective ldts of a vast number of our people while it lasts.

None of these considerations should prevent us from embracing Townsendism, provided we can be shown that the gains to be made are so great and so probable of achievement that the attendant losses are worth taking.

An intelligent nation will enter gravely upon many a program that involves serious consequences in some directions if it is convinced that the general welfare demands it, and that no less drastic plan of action will prove equally beneficial in the end.

NEW DEAL SPENDING

If you want to get an idea of the vast sums involved in the orgy of New Deal spending, just consider that from President Washington to President Taft the total of Government expenditures was only 24 and one-half billion dollars. This took in our entire peace time and war time expenditures of 124 years, including the building of the Panama Canal.

Well, in the less than three years of the New Deal, President Roosevelt has had appropriated for his use the vast sum of 25 billion 665 million dollars, or a billion dollars more thon we spent in 124 years.

Is it any, wonder that the public debt has now reached nn all time high of 30 billion 504 million dollars, and that Secretary Morgenthou says it will reach 36 and one-half billions in 1937?

Despite increased revenues, the Daily Treasury Statement shows why our public debt continues to grow at such an appalling rate. Relief expenditures have decreased, but general expenditures increased 384 million dallars during the first seven months of the fiscal year, making the deficit for this period 2 billion 108 millions.

There have been 252 thousand persons ndded to the New Deal's payroll. This huge political army alone is costing nearly 500 million dollars a year, in spite of the election pledges of economies of 25 per cent.

There are 10 million still unemployed, 20 million on relief, as a result of wild boon-doggling, and crock-pot schemes to get rid of two dollars for every dollor of Government revenue taken in.

Crushing taxes are sure to follow, taxes which everybody must pay, to make up for the New Deal's careless wnste of borrowed money. If this New Deal spending is continued, without tax increases, our alternntive is inflation of the currency. Remember what this did to the German mark? Well, it impoverished the entire nation when it got to the point where a billion marks would not purchase a loaf of bread.

This question of expenditures and public debt is your problem. The people of the United States should realize to the full just what this continued and reckless spending will mean to their children and their children's children.

The belief among many fishermen that fish can hear them if they speak above a whisper is nonsense, according to zoologists' studies of fish. Fish have no external ears and cannot hear most sounds made outside of the water.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Meets first Wednesday evening each month at 7:45 p. m.

Reading room open Saturday, 3 to 5 p. m.

Sunday school, 12 o'clock.

We cordially invite the public to our service and reading room.

"Man" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, March 8.

Among the Bible citations is this passage (Psalms 17:15): "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 346): "When man is spoken of as made in God's image, it is not sinful and sickly mortal man who is referred to, but the ideal man reflecting God's likeness."

ISSUE WARNING AGAINST BUYING BOOTLEG SEEDS

Urget Farmers to be Sure Purchases Are Properly Labeled

Warning against seed bootleggers who spread a vast amount of poor seed throughout the middlewest each year, was issued today by Commissianer of agriculture, James F. Thompson.

Thompson warns farmers to beware of any seed unless it has been tested and necurately tagged to comply with the seed law. Any seeds sold must carry an onalysis tag on each bag. Usually, Thompson pointed out, untagged seeds sold in this manner have been turned down by regulnr dealers on account of the foul stuff it carries. This will be especially true this year, the Commissioner said, as seed is not plentiful.

Beef and dairy cattle soon pay back manyfold the cost of treotments for cattle grubs thot cut into milk production and heef by annoying the animals. Non-poisonous olntments and washes paralize the grub and heal the bump. The time to do the job is now, accordlng to C. B. Dibble, entomologist at Michigan State College, East Lansing. Many farmers cut down grubs in 1935 and will be bfe to "clean up" their cattle grubs this year if they trent the animals now.

Small fruit trees need protection from the danger of splitting and breaking that heavy snow and ice may cause in thawing and freezing weather, warns T. A. Merrill, extension speciallist in horticulture at Michigan State College. After danger of drifting is over he advises walking around small trees in a circle tramping down the snow so that it does not freeze on the branches as the snow begins to melt.
